Permanent ban on suction dredging passes Oregon House

SALEM (AP)—Suction dredge mining could be permanently banned from Western Oregon's wild salmon habitat under a bill that has passed the Oregon House.

The bill creating stream protection passed Wednesday and is awaiting Gov. Kate Brown's pledged signature, The Mail Tribune reported.

Suction dredging uses floating vacuums to suck gravel from a stream bottoms. Material vacuumed by the dredges then go through sluices so miners can strain out gold and other heavy metals. Sand, silt and other fine material are discharged into the water.

Wild-salmon advocates say the process damages spawning grounds and rearing habitat. Miners have argued current laws already protect salmon habitat and that no peer-reviewed study on suction dredging proves it ruins salmon habitats exists.

The bill would make permanent 2016's temporary ban on suction dredging within creeks and rivers deemed "essential salmon habitat." The bill also bans dredging in habitat of Pacific lamprey, which are also present in the Rogue Basin.

In 2013, the Legislature passed a bill detailing new dredging restrictions, capping the number of dredging permits offered annually in Oregon and limiting some of the times, locations and manner for how dredgers operate. It was designed to expire at the end of 2015 to give the Legislature time to grapple with permanent rules, which are now on the horizon.

Salmon and stream advocates see the measure as a good way of protecting wild salmon while still allowing dredging in places such as eastern Oregon.

"We think it really is a compromise that protects rivers but not at the total expense of suction-dredge mining, which can still occur in rivers in the rest of the state," said Stacey Detwiler, conservation director for the Ashland-based Rogue Riverkeeper.

Rick Barclay, of the Galice Mining District and a dredging supporter, could not be reached for comment.

Oregon Senate backs use of red-light cameras to catch speeders

SALEM (AP)—The Oregon Senate has approved a bill that would let cities use red-light cameras to also identify speeders.

The Register-Guard reports the Senate passed the bill 18-10 on Wednesday. The bill now heads to Gov. Kate Brown for her signature.

Portland, Salem, Medford and Madras are among the cities in Oregon that use red-light cameras. The city of Eugene signed onto a letter in support of the bill, but doesn't currently use such cameras.

Beaverton officials led the effort to get the bill approved. The city found that in one year, 90,000 vehicles passed through their four red light cameras traveling at least 10 mph faster than the posted speed limit.

In a separate transportation-safety measure, The Oregonian/OregonLive reports the state Senate approved a bill that would allow Portland to lower residential street speed limits from 25 mph to 20 mph.

Family of suspect in Portland stabbing offers condolences

PORTLAND (AP)—Relatives of a man accused of stabbing two men to death who tried to defend two women from an anti-Muslim rant have offered their condolences to the victims' families.

In a letter, Jeremy Christian's family expressed sympathy to the slain men's loved ones; to the young women who were harassed on a light-rail train; and to those who tried to protect them.

The family said in a statement Thursday that they abhor violence, racism and bigotry and can't begin to understand the senseless act.

Prosecutors say Christian focused his racist tirade last Friday on two teenage girls, one of whom was wearing a hijab.

After the girls moved away from Christian, he got into a confrontation with other passengers. Prosecutors say he fatally stabbed two men and wounded a third.

Portland driver who shot 8-year-old pleads guilty

PORTLAND (AP)—A Portland man who shot an 8-year-old girl in the ankle during a fit of road rage has pleaded guilty to assault and unlawful use of a weapon.

The Oregonian/OregonLive reports 32-year-old Joshua Constantine will receive a five-year prison term at next week's sentencing.

Police said Constantine was on Interstate 84 last December when he began tailgating, darting in and out of traffic and forcing other vehicles to veer off the freeway.

The girl's mother drove up to Constantine's van to get his license plate while an adult passenger took cellphone video. Constantine fired one shot into the car.
