McDavid wins first Hart Trophy as NHL MVP

By GREG BEACHAM
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Edmonton captain Connor McDavid has won his first Hart Trophy as the NHL's most valuable player.

McDavid claimed the award Wednesday night at the NHL's annual postseason awards show at T-Mobile Arena, the new home of the expansion Vegas Golden Knights. The league also revealed the results of the Golden Knights' expansion draft to an arena filled with fans of the league's 31st franchise.

McDavid's victory capped a breakthrough sophomore season for the 20-year-old center, who won the league scoring title and led the Oilers back to the Stanley Cup playoffs after an 11-year absence. The former No. 1 pick beat out fellow finalists Sergei Bobrovsky of Columbus and Pittsburgh's Sidney Crosby.

"I'm so proud to be in Edmonton," McDavid said. "I'm so proud to be an Oiler, and so proud to play with the guys."

McDavid

Boston center Patrice Bergeron won the Selke Trophy for the fourth time as the NHL's best defensive forward, and San Jose's Brent Burns won his first Norris Trophy as the top defenseman. Toronto center Auston Matthews easily took the Calder Trophy as the league's top rookie, and Columbus goalie Sergei Bobrovsky won his second Vezina Trophy.

Nashville's David Poile was named the NHL's top executive after the Predators' first Western Conference title, and Columbus' John Tortorella won the Jack Adams Award as the league's top coach.

Ottawa goalie Craig Anderson won the Bill Masterton Trophy for perseverance, sportsmanship and dedication to hockey. Anderson left the Senators during the season to support his wife, Nicholle, in her fight against cancer, but returned to become Ottawa's career victories leader.

Calgary's Johnny Gaudreau won the Lady Byng Trophy for sportsmanlike play.

TRACK: Montano again will race while pregnant with the American Cancer Society to raise awareness through a campaign called "Together: Nothing Is Impossible." Grunewald and two-time Olympic triple jump gold medalist Christian Taylor are featured in a public service announcement, encouraging Americans to contribute for each medal that Team USA earns at the world championships later this summer in London.

"Many people in the track and field community have been touched by cancer in some way and are 'doers' by nature," Grunewald said. "This is a perfect way for us to make a difference this summer. It truly makes the medals mean more."

Some things to know heading into nationals this week:

HEAT WAVE: The competition schedule Thursday has been altered with the temperature expected to reach triple digits most of the week. With a high of 107 degrees predicted, the men's and women's 10,000 events were pushed an hour later into the evening. The men's event won't start until 10:09 p.m. The coolest day will be Sunday when it's only supposed to be 97 degrees.

HEALING: Sprinter Justin Gatlin has been dealing with a quadriceps/groin injury since February. He wouldn't put a percentage on his health as he plans to compete in the 100 and 200. "I've been to a lot of championships and trials and have not been 100 percent," Gatlin said. "I'm where I need to be at."

TICKETS PUNCHED: Being a world or Diamond League champion earned nine U.S. athletes automatic entries into the world championships. The defending world champions include Tianna Bartoletta (long jump), Allyson Felix (400), Joe Kovacs (shot put) and Taylor (triple jump). Those earning spots via the Diamond League are Kerron Clement (400 hurdles), Keni Harrison (100 hurdles), Erik Kynard (high jump), LaShawn Merritt (400) and Cassandra Tate (400 hurdles).

EXPECTING: Around five months pregnant with her second child, Alysia Montano is entered in the 800. Montano famously ran at the 2014 U.S. championships while 34 weeks pregnant and finished in 2:32.13 — nearly 35 seconds slower than her personal best of 1:57.34 in 2010.

THE NEXT SPRINT STANDOUT: With Gatlin, Tyson Gay and Merritt all in their 30s, this might be the season when some new faces emerge on the sprint scene. Keep a close watch on Tennessee standout Christian Coleman, who turned pro after recently winning the 100 and 200 at the NCAA championships.
