RAINBOW: Rancher upset by Forest Service's handling of the group

"It's risk-based decision," he said. "To try and kick them off the land would present a danger to employees and the public."

Tensions boiled over Wednesday night at a meeting hosted at the Canyon City Community Hall by members of the Rainbow Gathering and attended by Grant County residents. Within minutes, a brief yelling match erupted between residents and several of the roughly 2,000 attendees already at the site south of John Day preparing for the July 1-7 Rainbow Gathering.

John Day resident Ken Mayhead demanded to know how the gathering would benefit residents and the community. He complained about the large numbers of law enforcement officers brought to town and the burden placed on taxpayers.

"Taxpayers are cleaning up your mess," Mayhead said.

Rainbow attendee Gary Stubbs said the gathering purchased large quantities of food, fuel and camping equipment locally and estimated the gathering could bring as much as $300,000 into the local economy. He also said the number of law enforcement and government employees who were in town to monitor the event would also rent rooms and eat locally.

Other residents raised fears about the gathering consuming all the food and fuel in the area. Rainbow attendees said they were working with wholesalers in the Bend area to get large quantities of food and advised local businesses to anticipate heightened demand for food and fuel in the coming weeks.

Resident Kay Steele said gathering in the forest would put stress on local wildlife and disperse them into surrounding areas.

Stubbs agreed wildlife would be stressed and dispersed but said the ecosystem was likely to bounce back.

To attempt to assuage fears about what would be left in the wake of the gathering, Rainbow attendee Adam Finch Buxbaum read a letter from the Forest Service about the 1997 Rainbow Gathering near Prineville. The letter, from Big Summit District Ranger Susan V. Skalski, praised the Rainbow Family for their cleanup job of the forest.

urged the Residents gatherers to keep attendees respectful and stop them from being a public nuisance, citing incidents of public indecency and petty theft.

A resident brought up concerns the gathering was bringing drugs and problems related to substance abuse into the area and said she no longer felt safe walking at night. Stubbs said some of the people gathering were drug users, but the gathering was dedicated to helping people. He described Serenity Ridge, a drug- and alcohol-free camp at the gathering, which holds 12-step meetings.

Residents also asked why the group chose a forest near a community that had recently been ravaged by wildfire. Rainbow participants acknowledged the Canyon Creek Complex fire and said, because they mostly cooked with fires and wood stoves, they actually helped eliminate fire danger by removing downed wood.

Multiple attendees asserted it was their constitutional right to assemble on public land.

Resident Susan Church said a part of the fear is due to xenophobia. She said the local community had problems with crime and substance abuse just like the Rainbow Gathering.

Gathering Gathering participant Eloisa Lewis said attendees rented the hall to communicate with locals and to try to get them involved. She said the meeting had been "lukewarm" and that both sides seemed afraid of each other.

Lewis extended an invitation to all unsure about the gathering to come see for themselves at the site off Forest Road 24 in the Malheur National Forest west of Seneca.

Rancher Loren Stout, who lives near the gathering spot and has a federal grazing permit on land adjacent to it, had specific complaints about the Forest Service's handling of the group.

He said the Forest Service would punish ranchers if they ignored permit requirements and tapped a spring for drinking water like the Rainbow Family has done. Stout said it took him two years to get a National Environmental Policy Act permit to drill an exploratory mining "People are furious over this," Stout said. "Not because it's a friggin' bunch of hippies, it's the different standards.

On a Facebook page set up for this year's event, one person posted, "If we were in control we would all have free energy, everyone would be housed and fed and we'd be having song circles every day."

"What is the pants policy another noster" at this event?" another poster asked. He was assured that nudity should be expected. In other postings, people ged fellow "family" urged members not to upset locals by panhandling or "gas jugging," meaning to beg for gasoline. Others caution against "spanging," a slang reference to asking for spare change. A stabbing among Rainbow members during a meeting in the Umatilla National Forest earlier in June has area residents worried about what the larger gathering will bring.

The Forest Service also announced a community meeting for Friday in John Day to let residents ask questions of Forest Service and law enforcement personnel. The meeting is from 5-6:30 p.m. in the Juniper Hall Conference Room of the Malheur National Forest headquarters, 431 Patterson Bridge Road.

And the Harney County Senior Center, 17 S. Alder Ave., Burns, will host a public meeting Tuesday from 5-8 p.m.

PARENTS TALK BACK

Affluent teens face greater substance abuse risks

t can be a difficult group to advocate for: high-achieving teens going to the best schools, living in comfortable homes with successful parents.

This group sounds like the most privileged among us. Professor Suniya Luthar also sees them as among the most vulnerable.

Luthar, professor of psychology at Arizona State University, recently published research based on the New England Study of Suburban Youth, which followed two groups of adolescents from affluent communities into early adulthood. Luthar's research suggests accomplished teens in great schools are an under-recognized at-risk population facing higher risks for substance abuse than their peers.

We found alarmingly high rates of substance abuse among young adults we initially studied as teenagers," Luthar said. By age 26, the rates of addiction for men in this study were twice as high as national norms; rates were three times as high for women Rates of addiction ranged from 23 to 40 percent among men and 19 to 24 percent among women, according to the study, published in the May journal of Development and Psychopathology.

"The most common one we hear about is Adderall," Luthar said. "Who has it. Can I buy it. Who can give it to me." She finds that experimentation starts younger in this cohort and continues through college, where it can turn to ecstasy and cocaine. "When you are drinking vodka in Polar Springs bottles in seventh grade, it's a problem."

So why did these students in suburban schools, with high standardized test scores, robust extracurricular activities and white-collar professional parents, show consistently higher use of substances?

The reasons are likely multifold, according to Luthar: High pressure among teens to get into elite universities, access to disposable income, widespread peer approval for substance use and parents lulled into a false sense of security. When parents see their children performing well in school and in demanding activities, they don't believe they could have serious underlying issues with drugs and alcohol. It makes sense that the earlier children start to use alcohol and drugs, and the more frequently they do, the more likely it is they will develop addictions down the

"It's hard to face the truth," Luthar said, "that it may be your child who is cutting or snorting Adderall.

In her samples, the parents were educated — doctors, lawyers and teachers — families with access to resources for treatment, but also less likely to openly talk about deaths due to overdoses. She says a key to addressing the problem is drawing more attention to the data, funding more research on the topic and talking to teens about the research results.

"For high-achieving and ambitious youngsters, it could actually be persuasive to share scientific data showing that in their own communities, the statistical odds of developing serious problems of addiction are two to three times higher than norms," she said.

It makes sense that public policy has focused on the risks at the opposite end of the economic spectrum. Children born into chronic poverty face greater challenges and risks of negative outcomes than their peers. It can be difficult to argue for supports for affluent children already born into such a strong safety net, as opposed to those struggling to have their basic needs met.

But Luthar argues that it's a different type of intervention needed with the population she studied. It's not a call for diverting resources, but for widening the conversation to include the risks they face. It's also worthwhile to figure out how to minimize the risks for this population, she says. She wants more research on kids who grow up in pressurecooker, high-achieving schools.

One school she studied had six students die of overdoses in a single year.

"How many times are we going to look the other way?"
