Jury ends deliberations for the week in Bundy standoff trial

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A federal jury in Las Vegas has ended deliberations for the week on Thursday in the retrial of four men accused of wielding assault weapons against federal agents in a 2014 standoff near the Nevada ranch of anti-government figure Cliven Bundy.

Jurors spent a second full day mulling evidence in U.S. District Court in the case against Idaho defendants Scott Drexler, Eric Parker and Steven Stewart and Ricky Lovelien of Montana and Oklahoma.

The jury is due to return to work Monday.

The six men and six women are considering 10 charges after five weeks of testimony on charges including conspiracy, weapon possession and assault on a federal officer.

Parker and Drexler testified, although Chief U.S. District Judge Gloria Navarro ordered the jury to disregard Parker's testimony after deciding that he broke rules of evidence that had been set before trial.

The four men were tried earlier this year before a jury that found two co-defendants guilty of some charges but failed to reach verdicts in their cases.

The trial is a prelude to another expected later this year for Bundy, his sons Ammon and Ryan Bundy, and two other defendants.

Six other defendants, including two other Bundy sons, are slated for trial next year.

Portland hospital gave away recalled eclipse glasses

PORTLAND (AP) — Legacy Health in Portland, Oregon says some of the glasses it gave away at public events for viewing the upcoming total solar eclipse may be among those recalled by Amazon.

The hospital said Thursday that people who got solar glasses from Legacy Health at public events should discard them and buy new ones.

It says glasses it gave away at Legacy Health clinics or Legacy/GoHealth Urgent Care clinics in the past month are safe.

The online retail giant Amazon.com issued a wide-spread recall for eclipse glasses sold through its site after being unable to verify they met safety standards.

The total solar eclipse is the first one to cross the U.S. in 99 years.

The shadow cast by the moon first makes landfall in the U.S. in Oregon on Monday.

Eclipse traffic already heavy in central Oregon

PORTLAND (AP) — Traffic is already a headache in central Oregon as thousands of people arrive before Monday's total solar eclipse.

Traffic was backed up about 15 miles at one point on Thursday on U.S. Highway 26 near of Prineville, the last town before the turnoff for an eclipse-themed festival that's expected to attract 35,000 people in a remote area with narrow, one-lane roads. Drivers then had to contend with another 14 miles of traffic on local roads to the venue.

A handful of gas stations in Bend and Prineville also ran out of fuel Wednesday before getting restocked.

The scene echoed one on Wednesday night, when eclipse traffic first began to swell. Traffic backed up for 12 miles on the same stretch of road, doubling the drive time between the towns of Redmond and Prineville as an estimated 8,000 cars passed through.

"The numbers of people who were coming in, we are beyond capacity really on that highway. Traffic is moving — it's not stopped — but it's taking a long time," said Peter Murphy, a spokesman for the Oregon Department of Transportation in central Oregon.

Traffic officials reprogrammed traffic lights to provide more time on green lights on east-west routes. The Prineville police also closed the eastbound lane of the highway and diverted traffic onto local roads so the crush could clear.

In Madras, to the north, traffic was also picking up

Thursday but so far there were no traffic jams. Gas stations were still stocked, said Joe Krenowicz, executive director of the Jefferson County-Madras Chamber of Commerce.

The town of about 6,000 is considered one of the best viewing locations in the nation and is expecting at least 100,000 people over the next four days.

"We know that we will run out of gas at some times, but they will refuel. There will be some inconveniences," he said.

"We're encouraging people to come into Madras with a full tank of gas if they possibly can."

Traffic elsewhere in the state was still normal, officials said, but more visitors were expected starting Thursday and into the weekend.

"When it comes, it will come as a rush," said Dave Thompson, chief ODOT spokesman.

About 1 million people are expected to visit Oregon in the coming days — and up to 200,000 to Central Oregon — in the coming days to see the rare celestial event. It's the first total, coast-to-coast solar eclipse in the U.S. in 99 years and totality — when the moon's shadow blocks the sun and casts a shadow on Earth — first makes landfall in Oregon, making the state a top destination for eclipse watchers.

State officials are urging travelers to log onto www.TripCheck.com before they leave or call 211, an information number about the eclipse set up for the public.

Wildfire threatens buildings in Central Oregon

SISTERS (AP) — With the solar eclipse just days away, a wildfire raging within Oregon's path of totality threatened more than 400 structures Thursday and led officials to issue evacuation warnings.

Gov. Kate Brown invoked the Emergency Conflagration Act so the Oregon fire marshal can mobilize resources from around the state to protect homes.

"State agencies are already working around the clock and across the state, and as we get closer to the total solar eclipse, we'll need all resources available to keep communities, visitors, and property safe," Brown said in a statement.

The wildfire was burning in the center of the state near the town of Sisters in the Three Sisters Wilderness Area. The blaze started last week and stayed relatively small and tame for days. It expanded Wednesday to more than 5 square miles, charring dead timber in the scar of a 2006 wildfire.

More than 200 firefighters were working to establish containment lines.

The homes where people were told to prepare to evacuate lie west of Sisters, the Western-themed town where eclipse observers will see 34 seconds of totality on Monday. The Red Cross has opened a shelter at Sisters Middle School for those who choose to leave.

Other wildfires are burning in what is typically Oregon's busiest month for wildland firefighters. The state after a very wet winter and spring has so far been spared the kind of wildfire that destroys neighborhoods and burns areas the size of Rhode Island.

A public meeting to update residents on the fire was scheduled for Thursday
