North Carolina pitchers blowing away the competition at LLWS

By JACK DOUGHERTY Associated Press

WILLIAMS-SOUTH PORT, Pa. — At the Little League World Series, the question now is not whether anyone can beat the team from Greenville, North Carolina

It's whether anyone can get a hit.

Neither Sioux Falls, South Dakota, nor Rancho Santa Margarita, California, was able to do so against Greenville's pitching staff in the first two rounds.

It's the first time at Little League World Series that a U.S. team has thrown consecutive no-hitters. Japan did it in 2002.

Greenville used three pitchers in its 6-0 first round win Friday against Sioux Falls. Chase Anderson, Matthew Matthijs and Carson Hardee combined for 10 strikeouts and no walks to complete the seventh perfect game in LLWS history.

Two days later, Greenville walloped Rancho Santa Margarita 16-0 in five innings — the game was halted because of the mercy rule. Anderson and the 6-foot-1 Matthijs dominated again, and the Southeast bats produced 18 hits and two home runs.

It wasn't just the top of the order, either. Twelve of the 13 Greenville players recorded at least one hit and nine had at least one RBI.

"They're unbelievable," Rancho Santa Margarita manager C.J. Ankrum said. "One through nine and even their pinch hitters, they got in the batter's box and they wanted to hit. You got to tip your cap to them. They did a great job."

Leading the charge offensively have been Hardee and Thomas Barrett. Barrett has gone 5-for-6 and scored three runs in the tournament while Hardee cracked a grand slam in Greenville's second game and totaled five RBIs.

What's more, Greenville has been flawless in the field, too. The team hasn't made an error through two games and Hardee made a diving snare at shortstop against Rancho Santa Margarita that's been one of the plays of the tournament.

"Right now it's just crazy that we're in it," Hardee said. "It feels so different when you're here than when you're watching it on TV. Not a lot of people get to do this, so I understand how lucky this team is to be here, but I don't think it's going to hit until we get back to Greenville."

Anderson and Matthijs were able to pitch in the first two games because Greenville can keep pitch counts low — Little League requires at least one rest day, and as many as four, once a player has thrown more than 21 pitches in a day. All of Greenville's pitchers will be available to throw in Wednesday's game against Lufkin, Texas.

Greenville's accomplishment is all the more remarkable given its back story.

Last October, Hurricane Matthew tore through the Southeast, including the Greenville area. The home Cash Daniels-Moye, of a starting outfielder, was damaged so badly by the wind and rain he had to stay in a hotel.

community The responded by hosting a two-day baseball tournament to raise money for his family. Another Greenville family was also hit by the storm. Greenville Little League raised more than $20,000, and about half was donated to the two families.

Greenville is out in force at South Williamsport. Bright yellow, the team's color, fills Howard J. Lamade Stadium whenever the Southeast is on the field, and the parents and supporters from Greenville have been among the biggest and loudest crowds.

"I can't tell you how much Greenville and the surrounding community and now the state, have been behind us really since the state tournament," manager Brian Fields said. "They were loud. They were like the 10th man out there and we're going to need these folks."

Greenville's game against Lufkin on Wednesday is a semifinal in the U.S. bracket, featuring the last two unbeaten American teams. The winner will play the survivor of the loser's bracket for a berth in the tournament championship against the international representative.

"Those guys from Texas are good," Anderson said. 'We're going to have to compete with them, and I don't think we'll be nervous at all."

Klamath Falls golfer leads Northwest Open

WALLA WALLA — Klamath Falls native Justin Wiles sits atop the leaderboard at the Northwest Open Invitational after 36 holes of play. He snuck out of a four-way tie for second place on Tuesday despite adding a stroke to his tournament total.

He opened the week shooting 6-under 66 and was joined by Washington PGA Professionals Brian Thornton, Shane Prante, and Time Feenstra.

Wiles second-round scorecard was almost identical to his first, as he collected seven birdies and only two bogeys. He made the turn at the Wine Valley Golf Club in Walla Walla, Washington 4-under 32. Wiles then carded back-to-back birdies on the par-3 14th hole and the par-5 15th, but fell into some trouble on the medium-length par-3 16th hole and the par-4 17th.

He signed his scorecard after rebounding with a birdie on 18 and is now in contention for his first professional win.

Only one golfer recorded a lower score in the second round. Liam Kendregan of Kirkland, Washinton earned a new career low round after shooting 6-under 66. Berg, Feenstra, and Prante remain tied for second place at 9-under 135

Pendleton High alum and current Whitworth University golfer Reilly Hegarty was tied for second in the round Tuesday shooting a 5-under 67. But after a first round of 5-over 77, Hegarty sits in a seven-way tie for  $4\bar{2}nd$ place in the overall leaderboard.

Pendleton Country Club pro Tyler Brooks shot a 4-over 76 to follow up his even-par 72 and sits tied for 73rd overall.

The final round will begin at 7:30 a.m. Wednesday with a split-tee start.

Tee-off for Campus Life

UMATILLA — There are still some openings for the Campus Life Golf Tournament.

The two-person scramble format is Saturday at Big River Golf Course, Umatilla. The cost is $50 per person and the fee includes green fees, lunch, prizes and a raffle.

Last year's inaugural event raised $10,000 for Campus Life. The faith-based organization supports local youths.

BLOCKBUSTER: Celtics finally get superstar in Irving, Cavs set up for future

But Cleveland may have — 59 picks after Irving was his size and his heart and his didn't seem to be enough stay with the Timberwolves

"Of course we know who our competition is, and we know who are biggest threats are each year," Ainge said. "But we feel like this is a trade that can make us better, and that's why we did it.'

The blockbuster deal caps a wild summer for the Cavs, who lost their title defense in five games to Golden State in June. Since then, general manager David Griffin left, the team failed to convince Chauncey Billups to join its front office and James has played with fans' emotions with veiled postings on social media about his future.

Irving's trade demand cast a shadow over the entire organization.

"This trade needed to include both players and assets that we felt strongly could help us continue to compete for championships and we believe it does," said new general manager Koby Altman, who pulled off a deal that protects Cleveland's present and future. In Thomas, they're getting a proven playmaker with a stellar reputation. The 5-foot-9 guard is one of the league's most dynamic backcourt players with an uncanny ability to get to the basket. Irving may be the only better finisher among point guards.

The 28-year-old Thomas was taken with the final selection in the 2011 draft picked first overall. But he has steadily scaled his way up to elite status.

Thomas' reputation in Boston was cemented when he led the Celtics through the playoffs last season despite the death of his sister on the eve of the postseason. He also had a front tooth knocked out during the second-round series against Washington and a hip injury eventually forced the team to shut him down early in the East finals, won by the Cavaliers in five games.

"Isaiah had iust an amazing season this year and entertained us all, the whole city of Boston. And everybody fell in love with him," Ainge said. "He's such an underdog because of spirit which he plays.

Thomas is eligible for free agency next summer and believes he is worthy of a maximum contract. He has been quoted saying, "They better bring out the Brinks truck.

Cleveland also is getting Crowder, a solid perimeter defender, and a first-round pick that Boston got from Brooklyn. The package could help the Cavs reload if James opts out of his contract next summer and leaves Cleveland for а second time.

The Cavs drafted Irving with the No. 1 overall pick in 2011. He struggled in his first few seasons but blossomed in recent years alongside James. However, that for the 25-year-old, who has wanted to be the focal point on his own team.

Asked about trading a fan favorite who rose from the depths of the draft for a player who asked out of a team with the NBA's best player, one year removed from a championship, Ainge said he has done his homework.

"We feel comfortable with who Kyrie is and who he can be," he said.

Minnesota showed some interest in Irving after his trade request became public, but were unwilling to part with young star Andrew Wiggins as the centerpiece of a deal. Wiggins is expected to sign a max contract extension in the coming weeks to

The Phoenix Suns reportedly were not interested in parting with rookie Josh Jackson in a deal that also would have required Eric Bledsoe and the New York Knicks gave no indication that Kristaps Porzingis was ever on the table in a potential Irving trade.

Then the Celtics swooped in, landing the kind of star Ainge has long coveted. With the possibility of having to break the bank to retain Thomas next summer, Boston finally tapped into the treasure trove of assets that Ainge has assembled to get Irving, who is under contract for two more years.

Irving got his wish to get away from James, but he's not free of him yet.
