On Wednesday, Oregon State Police

The Oregonian/OregonLive reports Oregon Department of Transportation workers have spent nearly two weeks removing the trees, which were deemed likely to be a threat to motorists. The trees have forced the eastbound lanes of Interstate 84 in the area to remain closed since Sept. 4.

Goodright was last seen Sept. 3, when she left her 6-year-old daughter at a relative's

City officials plan to leave the north side untouched by thinning. It faces the Willamette River and is covered by evergreen trees.

The tree removal continued Thursday, primarily on Shellrock Mountain. But Oregon Department of Transportation officials say those threats and others should be minimized enough by Sunday night or Monday morning to allow reopening of the eastbound section between Troutdale and Hood River. The westbound lanes opened Sept. 14.

Report: Missing Oregon mother found alive

EUGENE (AP) — A Eugene woman missing since Labor Day weekend has reportedly been found alive.

The Register-Guard reports the circumstances surrounding the disappearance and discovery of 33-year-old Katie Goodright were not immediately known.

Relatives broke the news Friday on social media. The Lane County Sheriff's office said deputies have not spoken with the mother of two and could not confirm she's been located.

Goodright was last seen Sept. 3, when she left her 6-year-old daughter at a relative's home to spend a few nights with her boyfriend in Creswell.

The boyfriend was in the Lane County Jail this week for failing to report as a sex offender.

Eugene's Skinner Butte gets trim to reduce fire danger

EUGENE (AP) — Skinner Butte is getting a trim.

The Register-Guard reports that work crews have been clearing away invasive plants from three sides of the Eugene landmark, trying to reduce fire danger and improve wildlife habitat.

During the next three to four weeks, the thinning of brush and small trees will expand to parts of 11 acres.

The butte tops out at 682 feet above sea level. It rises about 240 feet above the surrounding neighborhood.

City officials plan to leave the north side untouched by thinning. It faces the Willamette River and is covered by evergreen trees.
