Teen accused of shooting 4 faces more charges

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Prosecutors filed 51 new charges Wednesday against a 15-year-old boy accused of fatally shooting a classmate and wounding three others at his rural Washington state high school.

Caleb Sharpe already has been charged with first-degree murder and three counts of attempted first-degree murder in the Sept. 13 shooting at Freeman High School near the tiny town of Rockford.

Spokane County prosecutors upgraded the murder charge to premeditated murder and added 51 counts of assault, representing other students in the vicinity of the gunfire, according to court documents.

Sharpe also appeared in court for the first time, where a judge said a decision on whether to try the teen as an adult will not occur until next year.

Defense attorney Bevan Maxey agreed with the delay, though his client will remain in custody.

"I have all kinds of concern for him being in jail," Maxey said. "This is a process that is going to take place. Everybody needs to be properly prepared."

The Associated Press doesn't typically name juvenile suspects but is doing so because of the severity of the accusations and because Sharpe's name was released in public documents.

"We would prefer he be handled as a juvenile," the defense attorney said. "That's what he is; 15 years old."

Family members of Sharpe and the victims filled the small courtroom

Caleb Sharpe walks into Spokane County Juvenile Court to a packed courtroom on Wednesday in Spokane, Wash.

but did not talk to reporters afterward. Sharpe did not speak at the hearing.

Court documents released Wednesday say Sharpe determined whether to carry out the shooting by flipping a coin. Detectives wrote in court documents that heads meant Sharpe would shoot students and tails meant he would not do it and never think about it again. The coin landed on heads, according to documents.

Sharpe also told detectives that he had been watching documentaries of other school shootings, including Columbine and Sandy Hook, for about a year, court documents said.

The documents said Sharpe told detectives about loading his father's assault rifle into a golf bag and putting a handgun in his pocket, The Spokesman-Review reported.

Once inside the school, Sharpe pulled out the rifle, which jammed, so he discarded it and pulled the pistol out, shooting a 15-year-old classmate in the abdomen and face, killing him, court documents said.

The teen then walked down a hallway, firing into the ceiling before wounding three female students, authorities have said.

Sharpe told police that he had been bullied by the boy who died but did not target him specifically.

Wyden gets bypassed on taxes by Trump

By JEFF MAPES
 Oregon Public Broadcasting

Oregon Sen. Ron Wyden has authored two bipartisan plans to revamp the tax code, including one with a member of President Donald Trump's cabinet.

But Wyden isn't being consulted on the new plan released by the administration and the Senate Republican leadership.

"You'll have to ask them why," Wyden said in a telephone interview Thursday. "The president and I had a chance to spend what amounts to about 30 seconds on taxes."

He said that was back in June. Wyden said he used those few seconds to urge Trump to follow the last successful revamp of the tax code — back in 1986 — by building bipartisan support for a bill.

But Wyden and other Democratic leaders say they want a plan that doesn't rack up more federal debt and that isn't tilted toward the wealthy or to major corporations. Trump and GOP leaders are now focused on trying to attach their tax proposal to budget legislation. That would allow them to get it through the Senate without facing a filibuster, which requires 60 votes to break.

Republicans tried the same tack on health care in their efforts to repeal the Affordable Care Act. That hasn't worked, at least so far because Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., hasn't been able to assemble enough Republican votes.

On taxes, Trump has tried to bring along a handful of Democratic senators from red-leaning states. For example, he gave Sen. Joe Donnelly, D-Ind., a ride on Air Force One Wednesday when the president traveled to Indiana for a speech promoting the GOP tax plan.

After they arrived, Trump told a crowd at the Indiana State Fairgrounds he'd campaign against Donnelly next year if he didn't vote for it.

Wyden said he's also been lobbying Donnelly and other moderate Democrats about what he sees as the ills in the Republican plan.

"I talk to every member of the Democratic caucus about taxes, including the several who have made it clear that they are looking at this carefully," Wyden said. "I think the amount of debt you're going to have here (with the GOP approach) is going to be a real turnoff to them."

The Oregon Democrat first developed a bill revamping the tax in 2010 with then-Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H. The plan never took off, but it was praised by many analysts for simplifying the tax code.

After Gregg left the Senate, Wyden joined forces in 2011 with Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind., to fashion a similar plan that also didn't go anywhere. Coats now serves under Trump as the director of national intelligence.

The Wyden-Republican plans contained some elements that are part of the Trump approach, such as reducing the number of tax rates and cutting the corporate tax rate while reducing some exemptions. But Wyden said his plans didn
