

PUBLIC SAFETY LOG

MONDAY

8:34 a.m. - The Umatilla County Sheriff's Office took a report of a burglary that occurred at Steve's Assured Security Storage, 80886 N. Highway 395, Hermiston.

9:07 a.m. - Juveniles on Southeast Division Street, Irrigon, continued to throw balls onto a neighbor's property, then damage the fence to retrieve them. The neighbor also reported the youth hit rocks with bats at their animals.

10:24 a.m. - Umatilla police responded to Columbia Crest Apartments, 1500 Second St., for two men fighting.

12:55 p.m. - A man told Hermiston police he and his wife are divorcing, and he wanted the car she was driving. The vehicle is in his name only, but he left it with her for the children. Now she is refusing to give it back to him, and it is worth $19,000. Police considered this a civil problem.

2:40 p.m. - The manager of apartments on Southwest 13th Place, Hermiston, asked police to send extra patrols because the complex had three bicycle thefts and transients set up a camp behind one of the buildings, but the camp is not visible from the street.

4:25 p.m. - A caller told Hermiston police his son contacted his wife to ask his father to drop a restraining order, which was a violation of the very restraining order.

Einstein proof: Nobel winners find ripples in the universe

WASHINGTON (AP) — For decades astronomers tried to prove Albert Einstein right by doing what Einstein thought was impossible: detecting the faint ripples in the universe called gravitational waves. They failed repeatedly until two years ago when they finally spotted one. Then another. And another. And another.

Three American scientists — including one who initially flunked out of MIT — won the Nobel Prize in physics Tuesday that launched a whole new way to observe the cosmos. Sweden's Royal Academy of Sciences cited the combination of highly advanced theory and ingenious equipment design in awarding Rainer Weiss of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Barry Barish and Kip Thorne of the California Institute of Technology.

"It's a win for the human race as a whole. These gravitational waves will be powerful ways for the human race to explore the universe," Thorne told The Associated Press in a phone interview.

The trio were part of a team of more than 1,000 astronomers who first observed gravitational waves in September 2015. When the discovery was announced several months later, it was a sensation not only among scientists but the general public. These are waves that go through everything — including us — but carry information on them that astronomers could not get otherwise.

"The best comparison is when Galileo discovered the telescope, which allowed us to see that Jupiter had moons. And all of a sudden, we discovered that the universe was much vaster than we used to think about," Ariel Goobar of the Swedish academy said.

Weiss said he hopes that eventually gravitational waves will help science learn about "the very moment when the universe came out of nothingness."

Gravitational waves were first theorized a century ago by Einstein, but he didn't think technology would ever be able to detect the tiny wobbles, smaller than a piece of an atom.

The waves are like "a storm in the fabric of space-time that is produced when two black holes collide," Thorne said. The first detection came from a crash 1.3 billion light-years away. A light-year is about 5.88 trillion miles.

The prize is "a win for Einstein, and a very big one," Barish told the AP.

The waves are detected by a laser device, called an interferometer, which must be both exquisitely precise and extremely stable in a project that cost $1.1 billion dollars. The first observation involved two of the devices about 1,900 miles apart — in Hanford, Washington, and Livingston, Louisiana. They came about 7 milliseconds apart, consistent with the speed of light.

A new detector in Italy went online and helped in the discovery of the fourth wave.

With the technology that the three developed "we may even see entirely new objects that we haven't even imagined yet," said Patrick Sutton, an astronomer at Cardiff University in Wales.

The German-born Weiss, 85, who initially spearheaded the research effort, was awarded half of the 9-million-kroner ($1.1 million) prize amount. Thorne, 77, a theorist, and Barish, 81, who was a project director, will split the other half.
