DEAR ABBY

Clerk gets lesson in privacy from owner of a service dog

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: Yesterday I was in a retail store with my service dog. The clerk asked me what kind of service dog she was and I replied, "She's my service dog." She kept pressing me as to exactly why I have one...

animal or ask what tasks the animal has been trained to perform, but cannot require special ID cards for the animal or ask about the person's disability."

Dear Abby: I have been friends with a woman for the last 30 years. Our children are the same age. My daughter, who is in her late 20s, has a number of tattoos on her arm that she can cover with clothing if she chooses. However, she doesn't cover them often because she likes them and they mean something to her.

Please let your readers know how to be around a person and their service animal:

1. You do NOT have the right to ask about the person's disability. To do so is rude. Most people prefer strangers not know their medical condition.

2. Children (and adults) need to understand that when service animals' jackets go on, the dogs know it's time to go to "work," and they take their job seriously.

3. You may ask to pet the dog, but don't assume it will be allowed. If given permission, the dog should be scratched under the chin ONLY.

Service animals know their place. It's a shame that most people are not as polite. — None Of Your Business

Dear N.O.Y.B.: Thank you for sharing this information. According to the Americans With Disabilities Act website (ada.gov): "Businesses may ask if an animal is a service

DAYS GONE BY

100 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Oct. 13, 1917

The Company L boys stationed at Campbell are not shooting pheasants or chickens or calves, according to Lawrence Dineen, one of the members of the Campbell outpost, and he and the other boys stationed there resent the report brought in by a Campbell farmer to the effect they are law breakers.

50 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Oct. 13, 1967

Halloween carnivals, bake sales, hobby show and watermelon sales ... individual contributions and funds from defunct organizations ... services of machinery and men, begged, borrowed and hired ... just a few of the ingredients mixed together by a group of Athenians determined to build a doubles tennis court for community use.

recognized the need of additional recreational facilities. The black top was hardly brushed with cement filler before youngsters showed up to use the base. And by the time the courts were striped and nets installed there was a waiting line.

25 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Oct. 13, 1992

Seven people, mostly juveniles, were injured this morning when the stolen vehicle they were riding in rolled on Interstate 84 near the Tower Road interchange west of Boardman, police reported.
