Judge tosses deputy's lawsuit against Black Lives Matter

By MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — A federal judge on Friday dismissed a lawsuit that accused Black Lives Matter and several movement leaders of inciting violence that led to a gunman's deadly ambush of law enforcement officers in Louisiana last year.

U.S. District Judge Brian Jackson's ruling Friday said lawyers for a Baton Rouge sheriff's deputy wounded in the attack "utterly failed to state a plausible claim" and instead launched a "rambling" and "confused attack" against Black Lives Matter, movement leader DeRay Mckesson and others.

Jackson previously ruled Black Lives Matter is a social movement and therefore can't be sued. Last month, he threw out a separate lawsuit in which a Baton Rouge police officer blamed Black Lives Matter and Mckesson for injuries he sustained during a protest over a black man's shooting death during a struggle with police.

The officer's lawyers also attempted to add "#BlackLivesMatter" as a defendant, but Jackson ruled a hashtag can't be sued either.

Donna Grodner, a Baton Rouge-based attorney who filed both suits, filed a notice Thursday that she is appealing last month's ruling to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. She declined to comment on the judge's latest ruling.

"I would like to respond, but I don't think it would be appropriate under the circumstances," she said.

Gavin Long, a 29-year-old black former Marine from Kansas City, Missouri, shot and killed three officers and wounded three others outside a convenience store and car wash near Baton Rouge police headquarters before he was shot dead. The attack on July 17, 2016, occurred less than two weeks after a white Baton Rouge police officer shot and killed 37-year-old Alton Sterling, a black man.

Jackson had warned Grodner in an earlier order that he intended to dismiss the suit she filed on behalf of one of the wounded officer, but he gave her more time to present her arguments for letting the case proceed. Grodner asked to amend her suit, but the judge said that would be "futile."

The suit doesn't name the wounded officer but its description of the plaintiff matches East Baton Rouge Parish Sheriff's Deputy Nicholas Tullier. Jackson said nothing in his ruling "impugns the character and courage" of the wounded deputy.

"That he suffered and continues to suffer from the injuries he sustained in the line of duty is not in question, nor should it be minimized," the judge added.

Tentative deal reached on deadly 'cyanide bombs'

BILLINGS, Mont (AP) — U.S. officials have reached a tentative deal with wildlife advocates trying to stop the use of predator-killing traps, including devices called "cyanide bombs" that earlier this year injured an Idaho teenager and killed his dog, according to court documents filed Thursday.

Government attorneys asked U.S. District Judge Dana Christensen to put on hold for 60 days a lawsuit over the poisoned traps pending final approval of the agreement by senior officials at the Interior Department.

Terms were not disclosed. One of the devices named in the lawsuit, called an M-44, is partially buried and baited to attract predators. It sprays cyanide into the mouths of animals that trigger it.

M-44s are meant to protect livestock but sometimes kill pets and injure people.

The traps drew increased scrutiny after The Associated Press reported that the injuries to the boy near Pocatello, Idaho, in March came months after a decision to halt use of the devices on federal lands in the state.

Another device at issue is a type of collar filled with pesticide and placed onto livestock so the pesticide will be ingested by attacking predators.

The Humane Society, WildEarth Guardians and two other groups filed suit over the devices in April. They say the traps kill thousands of predators every year — primarily coyotes but also foxes, raccoons, opossums and other animals.

The lawsuit said the Interior Department's Fish and Wildlife Service has not consulted with the Environmental Protection Agency on whether the poisons could harm federally protected species and their habitat.

Representatives of the U.S. Department of Justice, which is defending the case, and the Interior Department did not immediately respond to emailed messages from AP requesting comment.

Bethany Cotton with WildEarth Guardians declined to provide any specifics on the agreement. She said the goal was to stop the use of traps she described as "totally indiscriminate and incredibly dangerous."
