Keith's early years were spent in Joseph, Oregon, where he attended school, and loved the wonderful outdoor setting provided for fishing and hunting. At the age of 17 he joined the Army and served in Germany.

The family eventually moved to Umatilla, Oregon. After Keith's honorable discharge from the Army he lived and worked in the Umatilla area and also attended Blue Mountain Community College.

Keith married Gerry Migles and from the marriage a beautiful daughter, Toni, was born.

Keith was a handyman who had a variety of jobs including construction, maintaining bowling alleys, and working for the city of Umatilla. The last several years Keith resided in Caldwell and Boise, Idaho, to be close to family.

His parents, Ruth and Greg, preceded Keith in death. He leaves a daughter Toni, sisters Marilee Moors, Wendy Tunison (Mike) and Gwen Nussbacher (Walt), and brothers Scott (Janis), Tim (Glenda), and Randy Barton.

Author shares haunting story of WW II hunger march

By TAMMY MALGESINI
East Oregonian

David Dorfmeier, a Vietnam veteran and a clinical therapist with a special focus on treating post-traumatic stress disorder, shares about his father's experiences in World War II.

Dorfmeier, who wrote "C-Lager: Stalag Luft IV and the 86-Day Hunger March," recounts the service history of Sgt. Donald D. Dorfmeier and the air war in Europe. The story also chronicles the heroism of airmen who exhibited the courage to survive. The difficult march resulted in hardships and suffering that would "haunt them for many years to come," Dorfmeier said.

An author presentation, which includes a slide show, is Saturday, Dec. 9 at 11 a.m. at the Pendleton Public Library, 502 S.W. Dorion Ave. Admission is free.

being captured, participating in the forced march during the winter of 1945 and his escape during the closing weeks of the war.

Maj. Leslie Caplan, an American flight surgeon, said conditions during the march included bitter weather, living in filth and surviving on starvation rations.

"Hundreds of men suffered from malnutrition, dysentery, tuberculosis and other diseases," Caplan is quoted in the Congressional Record.

The younger Dorfmeier also served in the Army Reserve and was employed for 20 years with the Department of the Army providing clinical counseling services to active duty soldiers and their family members. After retirement, he served four years as a clinical consultant with the Department of Defense providing adjustment counseling to service members returning from Iraq and Afghanistan.
