The remains of a truck that caught fire and exploded in Wallowa County near Troy, killing Ryan Sullivan of Baker City on Nov. 29.

Baker man killed in bizarre accident

By STEVE TOOL
EO Media Group

A Baker County man died in a grisly accident at a Wallowa County campground during the early morning hours of Nov. 29.

37-year-old Ryan “Sully” Sullivan of Baker City died at Grizzly Flat campground near Troy after his Chevrolet pickup backed over a live campfire, where it stopped and caught fire with Sullivan inside.

Sullivan and another Baker City man had been hunting and camping in the area.

Wallowa County Sheriff Steve Rogers stated that the reason for the truck backing over the campfire is unclear.

According to Rogers, personnel from the sheriff’s office, the county’s district attorney’s office, Oregon State Police, U.S. Forest Service, Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, Oregon State Fire Marshal and the Wallowa County Medical Examiner investigated the scene.

Sullivan is survived by his wife Nicole and two small sons, Declan and Jack, as well as a child on the way.

A fundraising site has been established to help the family: gofundme.com/ryan-sullivan-memorial-fund.

Trump administration rolls back Obama-era oil train safety rules

Associated Press

PORTLAND — The Trump administration has angered environmental groups and residents of the Columbia River Gorge by rolling back a 2015 rule on oil train safety.

The Obama administration rule change required trains carrying highly explosive liquids to have electronically controlled pneumatic brakes installed by 2021 — systems intended to help prevent fiery oil train wrecks like the one that happened in the Oregon last year, Oregon Public Broadcasting reported Thursday.

A Union Pacific train derailed in the small Columbia River town of Mosier in June 2016, spilling 42,000 gallons of crude oil and sparking a massive fire that burned for 14 hours.

The U.S. Department of Transportation under President Donald Trump now says, however, that the rule change would cost three times the benefit it would produce and is rolling it back, the station reported.

Electronically controlled pneumatic brakes are supposed to be faster than the current industry standard — air-controlled brakes — because the simultaneously signal to the entire train.

Industry officials reacted positively to the news.

Chet Thompson, of the American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers, said in a statement that the rollback a

Retrial begins for man whose murder conviction was tossed

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A second trial has begun for a man whose murder conviction was tossed by the Oregon Supreme Court, which found he was wrongfully interrogated after asking for a lawyer.

The Register-Guard reported Thursday that 35-year-old Robert Darnell Boyd is opting for a jury trial this time after a judge heard his case the first time.

The state’s high court ruled last year that Boyd’s statements to police shouldn’t have been introduced at his 2012 trial in the beating death of his girlfriend, Allyson Archibald.

Boyd did not dispute at the first trial that he had killed Archibald.

His defense attorney argued at the time that he did not intend to kill her.

“rational decision.”

Conservation groups and lawmakers in the Northwest said the rollback was frustrating, but unsurprising.

“We’re definitely frustrated that the Trump administration is weakening standards that are not strong enough to begin with,” said Dan Serres, conservation director with Columbia Riverkeeper. “We saw that with the Mosier derailment, potentially if there was a better braking system in place, we wouldn’t have seen so many cars come off the tracks.”

U.S. Sen. Jeff Merkley, an Oregon Democrat, also slammed the move.

“Oil trains are rolling explosion hazards, and as we’ve seen all too many times and all too recently in Mosier it’s not a question of ‘if’ but ‘when’ oil train derailments will occur. Degrading oil train safety requirements is a huge step backward and one that puts our land, homes, and lives at risk,” he said in a statement.
