Teen boy charged as adult in Graham high school shooting

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — A 16-year-old boy has been charged with two counts of assault, drive-by shooting and unlawful possession of a firearm in connection with the shooting and wounding of two students outside a high school near Tacoma.

Multiple news outlets reported Tuesday that the teen was charged as an adult in the Dec. 5 shooting that sent two Graham-Kapowsin High School students to a hospital.

Charging documents say the day before the shooting, two girls argued in the school cafeteria. Documents say a male friend of one of the girls told the other girl's boyfriend something to the effect of, "You need to get control of your girl," which offended the boyfriend.

Documents say the shooting happened the following day at a site of a fight arranged after the cafeteria argument.

Documents say the suspect was among the people who had gathered to watch the fight.

Facebook to add two new data centers at Prineville campus

PRINEVILLE (AP) — Facebook says it will build two data centers on its campus northeast of Bend in Prineville.

The Oregonian/OregonLive reported Facebook said Tuesday it recently bought 240 acres from Crook County for the new data centers. The campus already has several buildings.

Facebook says the data centers will take up more than 900,000 square feet and will cost "hundreds of millions of dollars," most of which will go to the computers that run the social network and store social media updates, photos and videos.

Construction on the fourth data center begins this month, and Facebook said it will be operational in 2020. Work begins on the fifth facility next year.

It's been nearly eight years since Facebook began construction of its first corporate data center above Prineville, drawn by property tax exemptions worth $71.6 million since 2012.

Lawsuit: Bullseye was unfair target of pollution crackdown

By PARIS ACHEN
 Capital Bureau

The owners of Bullseye Glass Co. have sued Gov. Kate Brown and state regulators for $30 million for unfairly targeting the company for elevated levels of air toxins detected in 2015 near the company's Southeast Portland stained-glass factory.

The 80-page civil rights complaint filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court claims that the governor and state regulators arbitrarily used Bullseye as a scapegoat for air pollution that came from multiple sources and for the state's lax enforcement of air quality regulations.

State regulators "used Bullseye as a scapegoat to conceal from the public (the Department of Environmental Quality's) failure to establish any program to identify or control toxic waste emissions from small and medium-sized businesses," the lawsuit says.

The state's actions damaged "the goodwill, good name and brand that Bullseye's owners had spent a lifetime building," according to the filing.

A spokesperson in Gov. Brown's office was not immediately available Tuesday morning to respond to the allegations, but the governor typically does not comment on pending litigation.

Pamplin Media Group
Protesters demonstrate outside of Bullseye Glass Co. in Southeast Portland in 2016, calling for the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality to shut down the company's operations during an air pollution investigation.

The Portland Mercury reported in February 2016 that the U.S. Forest Service had found high concentrations of toxic metals in moss near Bullseye's factory in October 2015.

The federal agency had shared the results with DEQ, but DEQ did not notify Bullseye or the public.

"When alerted to a possible emissions problem for the first time in early February 2016, Bullseye acted quickly and conscientiously to address those concerns," the lawsuit says.

Bullseye was in full compliance with DEQ permits at the time that the agency brought enforcement action against the company, the lawsuit says.

In March 2016, some Southeast Portland residents joined in a class action suit against Bullseye for allegedly contaminating their neighborhoods and threatening their health.

Gov. Brown in May 2016 ordered Bullseye to immediately stop using certain hazardous metals after unsafe levels of air pollutants were found at a nearby daycare, the Children's Creative Learning Center.

"Public health and safety are my highest priorities," Brown said in a statement on the day of the order. "This swift action and public notification will help ensure the wellbeing of local residents who live and work in the area."

The lawsuit says DEQ misrepresented the results of air toxin tests, further tarnishing the company's reputation.

"No Oregon business has ever been treated the way Bullseye was treated in the actions described below," the lawsuit says.

In addition to Gov. Brown and DEQ, the lawsuit names Oregon Health Authority and Multnomah County Health Department as defendants.

Eugene Airport services 1 million passengers in 2017, breaks record

EUGENE (AP) — The Eugene Airport has surpassed 1 million annual passengers in 2017, the airport's first time doing so.

The Register-Guard reports that officials announced the milestone on Monday.

The city-owned facility had inched close to the 1 million mark in 2016 but fell short.

A robust economy and added flights have contributed to the airport breaking annual passenger numbers for seven consecutive years.

The airport competes for air travelers with Portland International Airport, which is a two-hour drive from Eugene.

The Portland airport usually attracts more than 1 million travelers per month.

Last year, 18.3 million people arrived or departed from Portland's airport.
