Free workshop on transgender issues

The state's largest LGBTQ advocacy group, Basic Rights Oregon stresses the importance for friends, family and community leaders to become effective allies — especially as the political climate in the United States grows increasingly hostile for transgender individuals. “Putting the T in Equality” is Sunday from 2-4:30 p.m. at Pendleton Center for the Arts, 214 N. Main St. There is no charge.

Topics being explored include gender concepts and pronoun use, barriers currently facing transgender Oregonians and non-discrimination laws that provide protection. Participants are invited to learn together by asking questions.

For more information or to RSVP, contact Julie at 503-219-3685, julie@basicrights.org or www.basicrights.org.

Oregon Humanities discusses death

HERMISTON — Talking about death and dying is difficult and often avoided even with family and close friends — the Conversation Project is opening the door to discuss the difficult topic.

Andrea Cano, a hospital chaplain in Portland, will facilitate a pair of discussions titled "Talking About Dying" Wednesday, Feb. 28, at 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. in Conference Room No. 2 at Good Shepherd Medical Center, 610 N.W. 11th St., Hermiston. There is no admission charge.

The Conversation Project brings Oregonians together to discuss important and challenging issues and ideas. The “Talking About Dying” series is facilitated by trained professionals from across the state working in the fields of chaplaincy, counseling, gerontology and hospice care. Jennifer Sasser, an educational gerontologist at Marylhurst University in Portland, will lead a discussion April 18 at 1 p.m. at Blue Mountain Community College, Hermiston.
