Initiative would ban 'assault weapon' sales

By PARIS ACHEN Capital Bureau

A group of interfaith leaders has filed paperwork for an initiative petition to ban the sale and transfer of assault-style weapons and high-capacity magazines with the Secretary of State's Office.

The proposal would allow gun owners who legally obtained such weapons to keep them so long as they register the weapon with Oregon State Police and pass a background check, according to the text of Initiative Petition

"People who legally own assault rifles or large-capacity magazines will not be required to surrender their firearms but will be permitted to register their firearms with the state,' said Penny Okamoto, executive director of Ceasefire Oregon.

Violation of the law would be a Class B felony.

"The people of the state of Oregon find and declare that a reduction in the availability of assault weapons and large-capacity ammunition magazines will promote the public health and safety of the residents of this state," the initiative petition states.

If passed, the proposed measure would ban the sale of semiautomatic rifles

A selection of long rifles lines the wall in the sporting goods section of the D&B supply store in Pendleton. An initiative petition seeks to put a measure on the ballot that would ban the sale most military-style semiautomatic rifles and semiautomatic pistols accepting magazines holding more than 10 rounds of ammunition.

that have any of a number of military-style features, such as a pistol grip or a telescopic stock.

It would ban the sale semiautomatic any rifle, pistol or shotgun that accepts detachable magazines holding more than 10 rounds. Restrictions on gun ownership have proven a divisive issue in Oregon. Yet a relatively recent public opinion shift in favor of more gun restrictions and national student activism for more gun control buoyed the group of interfaith leaders to accelerate the timeline for the ballot measure, said W.J. Mark Knutson, pastor of Augustana Lutheran Church in Portland and one of the initiative's three chief sponsors.

The group had originally planned to propose the measure for the November 2020 ballot.

Another round of rallies for gun control in Washington, D.C., and in cities across the country is scheduled for Saturday, March 24. Sixty-eight percent of all adults (and 48 percent of adults who are gun owners) approve of banning assaultstyle weapons, according to a survey last year by Pew Research Center.

Petitioners must gather 88,184 valid signatures by July 6 to land on this year's November ballot.

Wood panel fails during construction at OSU

CORVALLIS (AP) — Construction on portions of the new College of Forestry building at Oregon State University has been halted after a large section of subflooring made of cross-laminated timber gave way between the second and third stories.

University spokesman Steve Clark said no one was injured in the March 14 incident at Peavy Hall, Corvallis Gazette-Times reported. He said the university plans to hire an engineering firm to determine a cause and to evaluate whether any other cross-laminated structural elements in the building are at risk.

He said the placement of cross-laminated timber panels will resume when the evaluation is completed, and there are no plans to switch to more conventional materials. The building technique involves using solid wood panels to frame a structure's walls, floors and roof. It has been used for years in Europe, but is relatively new in the United States. The panels are lighter and much faster to assemble on-site than regular timber. Because the grain in each layer is at a right angle to the one below and above it, there's a counter-tension built into the panels that supporters say makes them strong enough to build skyscrapers.

There is hope that CLT will infuse struggling forest communities with new economic growth, while reducing the carbon footprint of urban construction with a renewable building material.

The three-story Peavy Hall will eventually become the new home of the OSU College of Forestry and is intended to be a showcase for the Oregon timber industry.

The project, however, has been unpopular with some say the original Peavy Hall, demolished two years ago, could have been renovated for much less than $79.5 million Davis, Anthony students and faculty, who college's acting dean, said he did not expect the failure of the CLT panel to increase the project's cost or significantly delay its completion, which is scheduled for early next He said he still believes the completed Peavy Hall will serve as a compelling showcase for Oregon's wood products industry.

"I know the capacity we have, I know the strength of Douglas fir and I am confident in our ability to continue to lead in the development of this material for use in midrise or high-rise buildings," Davis said.

The failure involved a cross-laminated timber panel manufactured by a firm in Riddle, Oregon.

settlement for foster child

PORTLAND — Oregon's child welfare agency has agreed to pay a $1.3 million settlement to a girl who was placed with a foster father later accused of sexually abusing her.

The state placed the girl, who was age 4 at the time, into the Gresham home of Gabriel David Wallis and his wife in 2014, The Oregonian/OregonLive reported Wednesday.

The suit claimed Wallis abused the girl in summer of 2014, and the state neglected her safety by placing her in his home.

Wallis was charged with rape and six counts of first-degree sex abuse, but he was acquitted of all charges in June 2015.

The charges came about after his wife had discovered possible indicators of abuse and took the child to speak with child abuse investigators. The lawsuit claimed the state certified Wallis as a foster care provider despite observing warning signs.

Oregon agency agrees to $1.3M Worker dies at plywood mill in southern Oregon

DILLARD — Roseburg Forest Products says one of its employees died in an accident at its plywood plant in Dillard, Oregon. The Springfield-based company has yet to release details about what happened, and says the incident is under investigation. The employee was identified as 57-year-old Joel Kuhse, who had worked for the company since 2010.

Martin Merica told The News-Review that his father-in-law worked at the press next to Kuhse, and called for help Monday after finding Kuhse motionless on top of his load.

The worker who leaves behind a wife and children was known for his infectious laugh, his Stetson hat and helping with an annual toy and clothing drive for children in Douglas County. Roseburg Forest Products will establish a fund for employees to contribute to Kuhse's family.
