OBITUARIES

Richard N. (Rick) VanCleave

Sherwood
 April 1, 2018

Richard N. (Rick) VanCleave, 64, of Sherwood, Ore., passed away peacefully Sunday, April 1 surrounded by family and friends.

VanCleave

A gifted labor attorney for 38 years, Rick was devoted to family and friends from all walks of life. Born in Ontario, he attended grade school in the The Dalles, graduated from Pendleton High (1972), Oregon State (1976) and Willamette Law School (1980).

He was a passionate golfer, never missed a Pendleton Round-Up and adored his basset hounds. Rick's love, sense of style, colorful zest for life and uniqueness will be deeply missed.

Rick is survived by wife Kimberly Cobrain; daughter Sarah VanCleave-Sweat and grandkids Brodee, Kodee and Gracee; daughter Katie (Todd) VanCleave-Jewell; mother Colleen Van Cleave; brothers Randy (Debbie) Van Cleave and Robb (Lisa) Van Cleave; and many nieces and nephews.

Rick was preceded in death by his father, H.N. (Bud) Van Cleave.

A Celebration of Life will be held at The Reserve Golf Club, 2:00 p.m., June 24.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be placed in honor of Mr. VanCleave to the Shriner's Hospitals for Children (www.shrinershospitalsforchildren.org) or Pendleton Foundation Trust (www.pendletonfoundationtrust.com).

Remembrances can be posted at www.Attrells.com. Arrangements by Attrell's Funeral Chapels in Sherwood and Newberg (503-538-2191).

Barbara Bush believed in power of literacy to cure other ills

By WILL WEISSERT
 Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — On a hot summer day in 1978, as her husband mulled his first presidential run, Barbara Bush headed to Houston's leafy Memorial Park for a jog while she thought about what issues she'd like to focus on should she become first lady.

Bush was concerned about stubborn societal problems like crime, the homeless, drugs and hunger. But as she ran, the then-53-year-old came to the realization that teaching more people to read could help decrease the other major problems, which can grow out of lack of literacy and educational opportunity.

"After much thought, I realized everything I worried about would be better if more people could read, write and comprehend," Bush wrote in her 1994 autobiography, "Barbara Bush: A Memoir."

It would be another decade before Bush became first lady, but, in the interval, she was active in literacy programs. In March 1989, mere weeks into her husband's presidency, she founded the Barbara Bush Foundation for Family Literacy.

On May 16, 1994, former first lady Barbara Bush reads to a group of children. Promoting literacy was a longtime cause for Barbara Bush, who died Tuesday at age 92.

"We love that story," said Lauren Sproul, the foundation's spokeswoman. "It really shows that, from the very beginning, the moment she even thought that she might become first lady one day, she immediately turned her thoughts to, 'How can I do the most good?' 'How can I help the most people?'"

The foundation has since raised more than $110 million to create or support literacy programs for men, women and children in all 50 states. Its programs include classes to help teenage mothers who left high school earn GED diplomas in Georgia, and teaching non-English speakers in Alabama the language and how to transfer what they learn to their pre-kindergarten-age children before they start school.

One in four American adults can't read above a fifth-grade level, the foundation says. A 2003 study by the National Center for Education Statistics found that nearly 15 percent of Americans lacked basic reading and comprehension skills. It took more than a decade to compile, though, and hasn't been repeated.

For years, the foundation offered grants to fund new literacy programs or bolster existing ones, but since 2012 has focused on creating direct models that use technology to reach adults and children, many of whom weren't always able to attend traditional, classroom-style programs.

The foundation says it has helped "easily hundreds of thousands" of people across the country over the years, but doesn't have a full count of everyone enrolled in programs it supported.
