12-year-old accused of giving pot candy

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Authorities say a Springfield seventh-grader has been charged with three counts of marijuana delivery for allegedly giving edible pot that looked like candy to several eighth-graders.

Officials said they learned of the incident when a middle school student went to the office at after lunch complaining of nausea and light-headedness.

The student told officials that another student had given her and two others a pineapple-flavored chewable rope similar to licorice.

The marijuana product looked like Nerds-brand candy sold in stores.

SALEM — From Oregon's wine country to Crater Lake to the Portland Trailblazers, it can seem like there's a special license plate for everything — but Oregonians will soon have one more to choose from.

Oregon State University, home to a whale research program, has gathered enough would-be purchasers to launch a new license plate design featuring a grey whale and calf on an ocean-themed background.

A lighthouse will also be featured on the corner of the plates, along with the words "coastal playground" printed across the bottom, for drivers who are willing to pay an extra $40.

The university's Marine Mammal Institute said in a Thursday release that that they had pre-sold 3,000 of the plates, the threshold for having a new custom-background license plate made available. The design should become available in early 2019, according to the release.

The whale plates are set to be launched under an Oregon program, running since 2015, which allows any nonprofit group or college or university to launch a custom background just by gathering enough
