Portland City Council plans to allow taller downtown buildings

PORTLAND (AP) — The Portland City Council plans to give developers the option of building taller buildings in the city's New Chinatown-Japantown historic district.

The plan includes new height and design guidelines intended to preserve the character of the historic district, which is the state's largest Chinatown community, Oregon Public Broadcasting reported.

The council previously had indicated it would set heights at 160 feet for much of the neighborhood.

But the council voted last week to allow buildings up to 200 feet in two different places.

The vote divided the council, with Mayor Ted Wheeler and others arguing that development would give the neighborhood a much-needed boost, while others argued it would effectively destroy it.

"We need to infuse old town Japantown with activity," Commissioner Dan Saltzman said. "And there is none there now. We need people to live there."

Commissioner Amanda Fritz appeared visibly shaken as she cast her vote and called it a sad day.

"I think this is a serious mistake that is going to repeat the mistakes that previous councils made in Albina, destroying a historic district and a cultural district," she said.

The council set a final vote for the plan June 6.

Mexican authorities arrest wife of drug kingpin, wanted for murder in Oregon

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican authorities have arrested the wife of the leader of Jalisco New Generation, one of the country's fiercest drug cartels, as well as a top lieutenant for the organization, setting the western state of Jalisco on high alert for possible reprisals.

Interior Minister Alfonso Navarrete said at a Sunday press conference that marines took into custody Rosalinda Gonzalez Valencia, the wife of Nemesio Oseguera Cervantes, known as "El Mencho," the night before in the city of Zapopan. Gonzalez is accused of managing the cartel's finances.

At the same location, the marines also captured Gerardo Botello Rosales, aka "El Cachas," who is believed to run the cartel's operations in the states of Guanajuato and Michoacan. Botello is accused of homicide, kidnapping and extortion. He has an outstanding order for extradition from the state of Oregon for a 2002 homicide, Navarrete said.

Saturday's arrests are part of the "siege" on El Mencho, said Alejandro Hope, a Mexican security expert. "They have been hunting him with greater intensity since the end of last year."

Navarrete declined to speculate on whether government agents were close to detaining the cartel leader. But he said he hopes to soon have news.

"I once heard that they arrived at a place and that he had just left because the coffee was still steaming," said Navarrete.

Jalisco New Generation has a reputation for battling with government agents. Navarrete said he anticipates a "violent reaction" from the cartel, adding that government officials have taken precautions to prevent or respond to possible aggressions.

The cartel brazenly shot down a Mexican military helicopter with a rocket launcher in 2015, prompting Mexican officials to declare an all-out offensive against the criminal group. Tensions spiked again this past February, after the cartel allegedly abducted and murdered two federal agents in the Pacific state of Nayarit.

Jalisco state Gov. Aristoteles Sandoval said earlier Sunday that the state is "calm" amid stepped-up security.

Jalisco New Generation is believed to primarily traffic methamphetamine while also selling cocaine, heroin and marijuana. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency said in its October 2017 National Drug Threat Assessment report that the organization has distribution hubs for illicit substances in Los Angeles, New York and Atlanta.

Hotspot found in area of Columbia Gorge fire

HOOD RIVER (AP) — Firefighters are trying to suppress a flare-up from last summer's wildfire in the scenic Columbia River Gorge.

U.S. Forest Service spokeswoman Rachel Pawlitz says a glow from the small hotspot was reported Tuesday about a half-mile east of the Herman Creek Trailhead. It was found smoldering in heavy downed timber.

Pawlitz says the discovery was not a big surprise. Though the fire was contained in late November, it has not been declared out.

She says hotspots are one reason trails remain closed six months after the blaze was contained.

Blake Painter, 'Deadliest Catch' skipper, found dead in home

ASTORIA (AP) — Blake Painter, a fisherman featured on the television series "The Deadliest Catch," has died. He was 38.

Clatsop County Sheriff Tom Bergin said Tuesday Painter had been found in his Astoria home May 25 by a friend who visited after being unable to reach him.

Bergin said a cause of death would not be released until a toxicology report had been completed, but there was no apparent evidence of foul play.

Daughters say Portland man was stabbed 17 times

PORTLAND (AP) — Daughters of a Portland stabbing victim say their father was attacked after telling a homeless man not to camp in the neighborhood.

Shawna Lebeckuch and Kayla McNeel say their father, Kasey Lebeckuch, was stabbed 17 times.

McNeel says her father was stabbed in the lungs, stomach, back, mouth, eye and back of head. He is expected to remain in the hospital.

Police arrested Todd Schneider on a charge of first-degree assault, but have yet to say what led to the attack or confirm that Schneider is homeless.

According to court records, Schneider told jailers he has no job or stable income.
