Parishioners take a lot of pride in giving park chapel a spring cleaning

By JENNIFER DORSEY
Jackson Hole News & Guide

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Except for holidays like Easter Sunday and Christmas Eve the Chapel of the Transfiguration doesn't see many people from October through May.

But that doesn't mean it's unoccupied.

Signs of winter squatters were all around as St. John's Episcopal Church parishioners prepped the chapel for summer services.

Signs like a chewed-up candle discovered by members of the Altar Guild as they made sure everything in the sacristy was ready for services.

"Every season we've got to clean up from the critters," said Annie Sampson, who leads the Altar Guild with Anna Mae Kass.

As the Rev. Jimmy Bartz swept the altar he caught more than cobwebs.

"Flies and mouse poop," said Bartz, rector of St. John's. "Maybe a little bat poop as well."

And Rob Kass knocked some straw-like material to the floor as he worked a log wall over with a broom.

"Looks like nest material of some sort," he said.

Coming out to Grand Teton National Park for the chapel's spring cleaning is a spring ritual for many, like Herb Brooks, who estimated that he and his wife, Amy, had taken part on and off for 25 years.

"We're helping the church," he said. "It's just something that we do."

Saturday's participants ranged in age from seniors like Dr. William Ramsay to kids like Jack Tobiason, 9, and his brother, James, who gave his age as "a medium 5."

"I love the chapel," George LeFebre said as he raked dead grass at a moment when rain wasn't coming down.

Volunteers help ready the Chapel of the Transfiguration for summer season Sunday, May 12 in Grand Teton National Park.

"We're here every Sunday during the summer," he said of him and his wife, Valerie.

Karen Smith came with son Greyson, 11.

"It's great fellowship with all the others," she said. "It's a job we've got to get 'er done."

Smith loves attending services in the summer with the chapel windows open, the sun streaming in and the sound of birds chirping.

"To me that's church," she said. "That's the real thing."

And, she said, the parishioners are honored to care for the popular chapel, which was built in 1925 to serve dude ranchers and tourists. It sees around 200 people between the two services on summer Sunday mornings, plus the many others who stop by at other times just to visit and take photographs.

"So many people come here," Smith said. "We have a lot of pride in it."

On a recent Saturday

some of the men wrestled the awning in place over the deck on the north side of the chapel and then arranged benches — the outdoor pews — in rows. The deck accommodates overflow when the chapel fills. But services are often so crowded that another deck is being built on the other side to seat 25 more people.
