HERMISTON Seniors take Walk of Fame through old schools

By JADE MCDOWELL
East Oregonian

Graduation isn't here quite yet, but Hermiston High School students got an excuse to don their caps and gowns Friday for the school's "Walk of Fame."

The purple-clad senior class strolled the halls of their old elementary schools as students clapped and cheered, then took a second walk back through Hermiston High School, led by a group of drummers. They ended up in the commons, where each student had the opportunity to sign a poster board with "Four Year College," "Military" or other post-graduation plans written on them.

Larry Usher, athletic/activities director for the high school, congratulated the Class of 2018 and told them to have fun and make their hometown proud. He told students he could see it in their eyes that many of them were nervous about what was next, but they didn't need to be.

"The best part of your life is about to begin," he told them.

The students will walk across the stage to receive their diploma next Thursday — the first Hermiston class to do so at the Toyota Center in the Tri-Cities. Senior Hermiston High School seniors sign posters proclaiming their post-graduation plans during the Walk of Fame on Friday afternoon.

Jakelyn Pacheco said she could hardly believe the big day was coming up so soon.

Pacheco said she chose to walk through the halls of Rocky Heights Elementary School, where she attended for four years.

"I saw two of my teachers, and it was so nice to see them after so long," she said. "We took pictures."

She said it was amazing to "see the little kids looking up to you, and you want to set a good example."

Daniel Studebaker had a similar reaction. He didn't move to Hermiston until seventh grade, but chose to visit West Park Elementary School to be an inspiration to his cousins who attend there.

"It was crazy, all these kids looking up to you like you're Superman," he said. "It opens your eyes."

Studebaker's post-graduation plans are for service in the Coast Guard, and he said while he's excited, "it hasn't really hit me yet."

April Brooks is enlisting in the Army National Guard and then plans to study law at Portland State University. She said she did her Walk of Fame through Sunset Elementary School.

"It was really cool and the kids were so cute," she said.

BOARDMAN Boardman dairy retains bankruptcy protections

By MATEUSZ PERKOWSKI
EO Media Group

The Boardman dairy facing a slew of financial and regulatory problems won't be forced to auction off its cattle and will instead seek to sell the animals together with the facility and land.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Fredrick Clement has decided against lifting bankruptcy protections for Lost Valley Farm, effectively forestalling a liquidation sale sought by Rabobank, the dairy's main creditor.

Rabobank sought to foreclose on the herd to repay some of the $67 million it had loaned to the dairy, but owner Greg te Velde filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, automatically protecting against such actions while he restructures debt.

His bankruptcy filing canceled a liquidation auction of Lost Valley Farm's cattle in April, but Rabobank has since argued the dairy shouldn't be shielded from foreclosure because it's being mismanaged.

Rabobank argued that Columbia River Processing, a subsidiary of the Tillamook County Creamery Cooperative, had terminated its contract to buy milk from the dairy and would cease accepting it after May 31.

Patrick Criteser, Tillamook's CEO, submitted a declaration the contract was terminated because the dairy wasn't paying its debts and had violated quality standards more than 60 times by supplying milk with high bacteria levels.

The bank also claimed that Lost Valley Farm is out of compliance with its "confined animal feeding operation" permit, which regulates wastewater, despite a settlement with the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Correcting wastewater management problems at the dairy will require expensive remediation, such as emptying and rebuilding manure lagoons, at a cost of nearly $400,000 that's not in the company's budget, according to Rabobank.

Te Velde's "substance abuse problem" also weighs against his continued operation of the dairy, since his "half-baked, slapdash approach" to complying with wastewater regulations is "just the latest manifestation of his drug problem," the bank said.

In court documents, te Velde disputed the contract with Columbia River Processing was terminated, saying that "my special counsel and I continue to assert there is a scheduled, valid, executory contract and we are prepared to litigate any act by CRP to discontinue receiving our milk product."

Te Velde also claimed he will soon begin work on lining another lagoon and upgrading a wastewater system but "there is no immediate danger of the lagoons overflowing."

While acknowledging his drug problem, te Velde said he's enrolled in a "recovery program" and will return to residential treatment for up to three months.

release, construction vehicles and equipment will be at the site throughout the day, requiring the city to close the bridge to vehicular traffic.

The city is advising residents who use the bridge to plan an alternate route.
