State lands considers forest management options

By CLAIRE WITHYCOMBE
Capital Bureau

SALEM — Oregon's Department of State Lands is looking into whether other entities, including counties or private companies, could manage certain state trust forests more cheaply than the state Department of Forestry.

The Department of State Lands relies on the state's forestry department to manage 33,073 acres of land that are required to generate revenue for the Common School Fund, which is essentially an endowment for public education.

The state land board — Gov. Kate Brown, Secretary of State Dennis Richardson and Treasurer Tobias Read — last week approved the department's request to look into alternative management schemes for those forests.

DSL Interim Director Vicki Walker, who has been at the helm of the agency since March 1, had suggested exploring other options for forest management.

The idea is for the department to figure out whether it might be more economical to have independent logging companies or counties manage Common School Fund forest lands, which are located in 18 counties.

"I'm trying to find the best way to run the program at low cost, keeping in mind our fiduciary responsibility," Walker told the board last week.

That request was prompted by the $4.82 million the forestry department has asked for in the next budget to manage those lands. That would be a $1.55 million increase from the current budget.

That includes the projected cost of fire protection.

The land board approved that request to keep the lengthy budget process going, but the department will also look into alternatives over the summer, an effort that Brown and Read appeared to support.

"I would not presume to know what the results of that inquiry will reveal," Read said. "I think it will be important for this board to be able to consider that, but it seems to me we'd be in a stronger position with more information."

IPO threatens legal action if nominee not in debates

By PARIS ACHEN
Capital Bureau

SALEM — The Independent Party of Oregon has threatened legal action if organizers of several upcoming gubernatorial debates exclude their nominee, Patrick Starnes.

"I hope we don't have to come to court," Starnes said Monday. "I would rather just come to the debates."

Starnes, a cabinet maker from Brownsville, won the IPO nomination earlier this month. He is up against Democrat incumbent Gov. Kate Brown and GOP nominee Rep. Knute Buehler of Bend.

Starnes said he has not been invited to participate in any debates or forums involving his opponents.

Under Oregon law, unless the organizers of any public forum or debate invite all major-party candidates for the office they are required to report the cost of the debate and advertising for the debate as an in-kind campaign contributions to the candidates who were invited.

"Our party intends to pursue all state and federal remedies available to us to ensure our candidate's participation in these debates," said IPO Co-Chair Rob Harris.

Last week, Buehler announced that he had accepted invitations for debates and forums hosted by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association, KOB1-NBC TV in Medford, KATU-ABC TV in conjunction with Portland State University in Portland, KGW-NBC TV in Portland and the nonprofit Children First of Oregon.

Chris Broderick, a spokesman at PSU, said the governor had declined the invitation from PSU and KATU-ABC TV.

"As of today we don't have a debate," Broderick said. "Hopefully there will be more debates, and we can host one."

None of the other debate and forum organizers were immediately available for comment as of 5 p.m. Monday.

The governor has called for three debates but has yet to schedule those events, said Christian Gaston, her campaign communications director.

Charitable and educational nonprofit corporations are prohibited from making campaign contributions to support or oppose candidates for public office, under the Internal Revenue Code.

Corrections

The East Oregonian published incorrect information from Pendleton police identifying Christine Laib of Pendleton as one of the people officers arrested the weekend of June 8. Instead, she was the person who reported a possible drunk driver and Pendleton officers arrested Christopher M. Rhoades, 31, of Pendleton.

The East Oregonian published a story June 8 about construction on Orchard Avenue and other streets around Hermiston from July 8-10. Traffic will be disrupted during construction but assistant city manager Mark Morgan clarified that one lane of travel will be kept open.
