What Is a Staycation?

Two weeks exploring another country or a new city can be an amazing way to spend your vacation. It can also be expensive, time-consuming to plan and involve days of travel. If you're looking for a different way to spend your vacation days, consider a staycation — a vacation in the comfort of your own home.

Forbes Magazine offers a number of convincing arguments for why a few days spent relaxing and checking out your own neighborhood can be just as fun as a trip.

SAVING MONEY

Between flights, hotels, eating out three meals a day and entry fees to various attractions, vacations can get pricey. AAA reports that the average North American vacation costs almost $250 a day for two people, and when children are added to the mix, it gets even more expensive. If you can't afford that every year, a staycation is a good way to mix things up.

SAVING TIME

Depending on where you're going, two full days of your vacation could be spent traveling to your destination. If you can spare two weeks for a trip, that's not too bad. If you only have a few days, though, you don't want to spend half of that in transit. A staycation allows you to spend all your days off playing, relaxing and enjoying the time. You also get to skip the long car trip or line at the airport and navigating around a new city.

WHATEVER THE WEATHER, ADAPT

Bad weather can ruin vacation plans, either because you aren't able to do what you want or you do it anyway, but it's much less fun because of the rain or dust storm. When you're spending your vacation at home, it's much easier to adjust plans around weather or other circumstances, including waking up on the day you planned to go hiking and decide it's the day you want to have breakfast in bed and read instead.

IGNORE THE CHORES

Taking a couple of days off work to catch up on outdoor repairs or attack the piles of laundry and dirty dishes is not a staycation. You have to change up your routine and make your days fun, relaxing and different from what you normally do. Sleep in, eat brunch and save the vacuuming for later. You're on vacation.
