Planning Your Staycation

Although we all have days off that are simply a day off, with no plans for work or play, you want to approach a staycation as if it's a vacation. The Health Sessions recommends a number of ways to make a staycation enjoyable, exciting, relaxing and all the things a good vacation offers. So much of that comes down to how well you plan.

- DO YOUR RESEARCH
Do as much research for a staycation as you would for a vacation. Find out what attractions there are in your city through the convention and visitors website, community center and your local newspaper's events page and find out what's happening. Make a list of things you've always thought about doing but never got around to.
- MAKE A SCHEDULE
Take the time off work, mark the staycation on the calendar and treat it as you would a vacation for which you were leaving town. Plan out your days with activities you want to do. Want to spend an afternoon napping, reading a book or bingeing on Netflix? Schedule it, guilt-free. But don't be afraid to change up the schedule or leave free time either.
- DELEGATE
Involve your children in the planning. Let them pick activities they want to do, research nearby attractions or plan a backyard campout or sleepover in the living room. This helps them to get more excited about their vacation as well.
- SPLURGE A LITTLE
You don't have to spend

- every night at home or eat every meal around your kitchen table. A staycation is a great time to splurge on a restaurant you might not normally go to. Or, you can spend one night in a local hotel, enjoying the swimming pool, continental breakfast and changed surroundings. You can also leave chocolates on the pillow, have fresh flowers in a vase on the table or do other little things to fancy up your home.
- GET READY
You may not need to pack, but do grocery shopping and take care of necessary tasks beforehand. Knowing your fridge is full and you don't need to worry about running errands will allow you to relax more. Let extended family, your boss and others know that you won't be available during this time. Allow yourself to unplug, just as you would if you were on a beach, hiking a mountain or exploring a foreign country.
