

MAGIC SHOW

WOULDN'T IT BE COOL IF ...

Magician unleashes imagination to create new tricks

Expect the unexpected in Louie Foxx's comedy magician show.

In one of his performances, a kid fed him marshmallows off the floor, but that was not part of the act. "I thought to myself, 'I've got to eat this. That's funny,'" he said.

And he did.

With props like a deck of cards, a cup of milk and duct tape, Foxx prides himself on doing tricks with ordinary objects you can find around the house. That's because he invents most of his own tricks.

"I grew up in a small town in Minnesota, so you either threw rocks at windows or learned a cool hobby," he said.

Magic was his cool hobby.

He finds inspiration by carrying a notepad everywhere and starting his sentences with "Wouldn't it be cool if" and then finishing them with a potential trick. For example, wouldn't it be cool if he could make milk disappear and then make the cup disappear with it? Expect to see that in his show.

"One of my favorite parts is when someone gives you a face like you just ruined everything," he said. In this day and age, anyone can look up how something works on the internet. But Foxx likes to show people tricks where they have no idea how it works.

He said fair-goers should expect to have their minds boggled and experience uncomfortable situations.

"Anything can happen," he said. "Anything does happen."
