

SEAHAWKS: Thomas last player still on roster from first Carroll draft class

placed on the reserve/PUP list Thursday as a procedural move due to his contract. Cliff Avril, another standout in recent seasons, was on the sideline as a sports talk radio co-host with his own neck injury clouding his chances of ever playing again.

Hanging over it all is uncertainty about Thomas, the last player still on Seattle's roster from the first draft class under Carroll and general manager John Schneider.

Bradley McDougald and Tedric Thompson were both getting time at free safety with Thomas absent. McDougald is expected to be the replacement for Chancellor at strong safety, but has played both safety positions in the past. Thompson is entering his second season after being a fourth-round pick out of Colorado a year ago.

"Right now we can't focus on him. He's not here. He has our support but we've got to focus on who is here and make sure those guys get right and make sure we're doing everything we can for the guys that are here," Wagner said. "I've voiced my support. I understand this is a tough business. Like I said before, it's not a business that is necessarily in favor of the players ... but we've got to focus on what we've got right now."

NOTES: Seattle has injury concerns on the defensive line from the start. DE Dion Jordan has an undisclosed injury and is starting camp on the physically unable to perform list after a career that's been filled with knee issues. DE Frank Clark had surgery on his wrist over the summer and will be limited at the start of camp. Defensive line is one of the big questions for Seattle after losing Avril, Bennett and Sheldon Richardson in the offseason. ... TE Ed Dickson is starting camp on the non-football injury list due to a groin injury suffered during his offseason workouts, Carroll said.

Seahawks release Malik McDowell

RENTON, Wash. (AP) — The Seattle Seahawks released defensive lineman Malik McDowell at the start of training camp Thursday.

The 2017 second-round pick never played a down for the team following an ATV accident.

Cornerback DeAndre Elliott was also released ahead of Seattle's first practice.

McDowell was released with a non-football injury designation, while Elliott failed his physical.

Seattle had high hopes for McDowell when he was taken as the Seahawks' first draft pick in 2017. He never saw the field, though, after suffering a severe concussion in an ATV accident prior to the start of training camp a year ago. The team remained vague about his specific injuries throughout last season, but it became clear he might never suit up.

Defensive tackle Malik McDowell

The Seahawks also placed safety Kam Chancellor on the reserve/physically unable to perform list. The procedural move was expected after Chancellor announced he was unlikely to play again due to a neck injury but didn't officially retire due to his contract.

MARINERS: Possibly still in the market for a hitter before trade deadline

those teams is going to separate to make it to the playoffs because those kinds of games you're going to need to advance to the playoffs."

Whether the Mariners can rediscover their offensive punch is a major concern with the non-waiver trade deadline approaching and Oakland suddenly nipping at Seattle's heels in the wild-card race.

Seattle's June surge saw the Mariners go 19-9 while averaging 4.5 runs per game, hitting 40 home runs and batting .261 with an on-base plus slugging percentage of .754.

Everything changed in July. In 18 games this month, the Mariners are averaging 3.2 runs per game, their batting average has dropped to .232 and the OPS to .651. In 11 of the past 14 games, the Mariners have scored three runs or less, putting even more pressure on a pitching staff that so far has thrived in high-pressure situations this season.

"You can tear down the stats any way you want to tear it down. It's baseball. You go a little bit streaky here and there. That's where we're at. We weren't going to play at the pace that we were playing as far as the wins and losses go. It's just the way the game is set up to be," manager Scott Servais said.

"I think every team out there has areas of the whole team they need to improve and get better at. Offense for us has been a little bit of a struggle putting up big numbers, to go out there consistently and put up five, six runs every game. When we do that we win. Most teams do because our pitching is pretty good. It just hasn't been easy for us here the last 20 games."

Seattle will get a boost next month when Robinson Cano returns from his 80-game suspension. But even that could come at a cost with the possibility he'll take playing time from Ryon Healy at first base. There's also the lingering reality that even if Cano bolsters Seattle's offense down the stretch, he won't be available should the Mariners make the postseason.
