

Glacier latest U.S. park to be scorched by Western wildfires

By MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

A wildfire destroyed structures and forced evacuations Monday from the busiest area of Montana's Glacier National Park, as officials in California prepared to reopen Yosemite National Park following a two-week closure at the height of the summer season.

Glacier's Sprague Creek campground was closed and evacuated, a day after a fast-moving fire triggered the evacuation of dozens of guests from the historic Lake McDonald Lodge late Sunday night.

Park officials said in a statement that structures on the north end of Lake McDonald were lost, but they did not provide details on the number and type. The fire grew to between 2 and 4 square miles by Monday afternoon.

"It just completely exploded. Yesterday we were watching it grow all day, and now it's so smoky you can't see anything," said Kyersten Siebenaler with Glacier Outfitters, which rents boats in Apgar, a small community at the south end of the lake.

The outfitting company was trying to help tourists who evacuated find places to stay on the east side of the park, where it was not as smoky, Siebenaler said.

motel and private residences inside the park's boundary also were evacuated. A 30-mile stretch of the scenic Going-to-the-Sun Road was closed to traffic. The road, with breathtaking views of the park's mountainous interior, is a major draw for tourists.

Triple-digit temperatures across parts of the state — paired with lightning from passing thunderstorms — set the stage for several new large fires to take hold in Montana in recent days.

Among them was a 3-square-mile fire that triggered an evacuation order for residents of 15 houses southwest of the town of Ennis, Montana. The fire was burning in challenging mountain terrain with a mix of pine, fir and spruce trees, said fire information spokesman Dave Sabo.

Montana had a slow start to this year's fire season following a record-setting 2017 in which more than 2,400 square miles burned. This year's fires so far have charred a combined 30 square miles of the state.

In Colorado, a wildfire in the southwestern portion of the state ignited by lightning July 29 had burned across 34 square miles by Monday.

Wildfires flare up regularly at many of the large national parks that dot the U.S. West, often burning in densely-forested, backcountry areas where their effects are limited. This year's blazes threaten to have a magnified impact coming at the height of the summer tourist season.

More than 400,000 visitors last month passed through the west entrance of Glacier, near McDonald Lake. That was almost half the park's total. August is typically just as busy, and a protracted shutdown of part of the park could hurt the tourist-driven local economy.

"We're hoping this is short-lived," said Danny McIntosh, marketing manager for Glacier Park Collection by Pursuit, which operates Motel Lake McDonald. McIntosh said all of the guests in the motel's 28 rooms were relocated to other accommodations run by the company.

Yosemite was scheduled to reopen Tuesday after being largely closed since July 25 because of smoke from fires in remote areas that choked the scenic Yosemite Valley.

The closure caused upheaval for thousands of tourists whose summer trips were cancelled. Visitors were warned to expect limited hours and services as the park returns to normal.

The fire burning in Glacier was one of several started in the park by lightning on Saturday evening. Windy, dry conditions on Sunday caused the blaze to spread rapidly, in full view of tourists and people who live and work around Lake McDonald, a 9-mile (14-kilometer) body of water ringed by steep-sided mountains.

Two planes from Canada were brought in to help battle the blaze, but officials said high winds prevented their pilots from flying close enough to the fire to be effective.

Protection service knocks down website for Umatilla County

PENDLETON — Umatilla County's website was down during the weekend.

Dan Lonai, director of the county's administrative services, said the county last week implemented Project Shield, the free service Google provides to protect sites against denial-of-service attacks, which are cyber efforts to bombard web services with heavy traffic.

Lonai said it looks like the new protection, however, took down the county's website.

"It's not supposed to do that," he said.

Lonai became aware of the problem Monday morning and said he would contact Google to sort out the problem. The county's website was up and running before 10:30 that morning.

The county fair wrapped up on the weekend, and county commissioners have no public meetings this week for lack of a quorum.

According to the county's online schedule, Commissioner Bill Elfering is at the Oregon Association of Counties board retreat Monday and Tuesday in Welches, then the rest of the work week is at a CityCounty Insurance Services Board meeting in Sunriver. Commissioner Larry Givens is in the office Monday and Tuesday, then he takes vacation. And Commissioner George Murdock is on vacation through Aug. 28.

Multi-talented entertainer presents unique concert

PENDLETON — A Florida man shares his faith in a unique way — incorporating his skills in singing, songwriting and ventriloquism.

Brent Vernon and his friend Sam will appear in concert Wednesday from 7-8:15 p.m. at the Pendleton First Christian Church, 215 N. Main St. There is no admission charge. Vernon, who was introduced to ventriloquism at age 8 when his parents gave him a "puppet" for Christmas. It didn't take him long to figure to the technique, and he was entertaining friends and family.

While on a concert tour shortly after high school, others in the group encouraged Vernon to incorporate ventriloquism into the program. Although initially Vernon was hesitant, it proved to be a big hit.

For more information, call 276-5358. For more about Vernon, visit www.brentvernon.net.
