Closet Breakdown

Do you find yourself standing in front of your closet for 10 minutes before you pick an outfit? It's time to curate your closet. The good news is that you may already own a perfectly stylish fall wardrobe but can't see it for all the other clothes in the way.

YOU'RE NOT ALONE

This is a common problem. In fact, according to a 2016 study conducted by closet organization company ClosetMaid found that one in 10 women are depressed when they open their closet and another 40 percent say they don't like any of their clothes.

The average American woman has 103 items of clothing in her closet, but she considers 33 percent too tight, 24 percent too loose, 21 percent unwearable and there is another 12 percent that remain unworn, new with tags.

THE 10 PERCENT YOU LIKE

Examine your clothes one by one and pick out your favorite pieces – the ones that make you feel the most confident. Ten minutes before you leave the house is not the time for this task, so carve out some time in the coming weekend so that you can begin the next week minus fashion stress.

Given that most women admit to liking only 10 percent of their clothes, you may find yourself with a very streamlined wardrobe. There is no need to Marie Kondo those clothes. Donate them if you want to, but consider packing them away for a while and consider them later.

Now you can see your faves rather than them hiding in a sea of rejects. Getting ready in the morning has never been easier.

ASK YOURSELF QUESTIONS

Be honest when you answer.

It is important to understand your lifestyle when curating your closet. Many women shop for the lifestyle they wished they had rather than the one they are living. When it comes time to get dressed in the morning, they feel as if they have nothing to wear because their wardrobe doesn't sync with who they really are.

Some of you live in a warmer climate that lacks a traditional, cool fall. Try and incorporate elements of coziness into your outfits through color and texture rather than heavy, too warm weight. This is what will help you achieve that fall feeling even if you are battling some major heat.
