Slayings suspect yells
‘I am not guilty!’ to jury

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — A career criminal accused by authorities of raping and killing six women in the 1970s yelled “I am not guilty!” to a jury at the start of his trial Friday for two of the killings.

Rodney Halbower also yelled “I have never raped or murdered in my life!” to the jury in an outburst that briefly disrupted court proceedings, led to a request for a mistrial by his lawyer and claims by a prosecutor that the outburst was staged.

The killings happened in 1976 in California’s San Mateo County and in Reno, Nevada, and were nicknamed the Gypsy Hill Killings. DNA evidence led to Halbower’s arrest in 2014. He was in prison in Oregon at the time.

Halbower, 69, is now trial on trial for the 1976 rapes and murders of two high school students within weeks of each other. The Gypsy Hill Killings sent fear through the San Francisco Bay Area when they happened.

Prosecutors have said they don’t plan to try Halbower for the other killings because a conviction in the current trial — for which their evidence is strongest — would keep him locked up for life.

After Halbower’s outburst, Judge Mark Forcum denied several motions for a mistrial made by Halbower’s attorney, John Halley.

“He doesn’t get to set up his own mistrial,” said Forcum.

Prosecutor Sean Gallagher said he believed Halbower was purposely seeking a mistrial and vowed to talk over his outbursts during opening statements.

Police say shooter’s gun jammed during office rampage

CINCINNATI (AP) — The shooter who killed three people in a Cincinnati office high-rise once acted disoriented after being fired four years ago in South Carolina, and he filed a recent lawsuit that a judge in June said “borders on delusional.”

Authorities on Friday said they have not figured out why 29-year-old Omar Enrique Santa Perez opened fire inside the lobby of a building where he never worked or had any known connection. The city’s police chief said the gunman’s mental health history is one of several areas they are investigating.

Police Chief Eliot Isaac said Santa Perez bought the 9 mm handgun legally about a month ago in Cincinnati before he randomly shot at workers Thursday morning in the building that houses the headquarters of Fifth Third Bancorp.

Security footage from inside the lobby showed him firing while carrying a briefcase containing hundreds of rounds of ammunition over his shoulder. Police later found his gun had jammed during the four-minute rampage, Isaac said.

The video also showed Santa Perez walking quickly past a security turnstile just as he was shot by police officers who fired through a plate glass window.

Santa Perez had been in Cincinnati since at least 2015, police said.

Before that he lived in South Carolina and Florida.

He filed a lawsuit in 2017 that claimed CNBC Universal Media LLC and TD Ameritrade Holding Corp. hacked into his computer, spied on him and published details about him.

Santa Perez said the companies tapped into audio speakers and digital cameras to invade in his private life.
