USC agrees to pay $215M to settle doctor sexual abuse claims

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The University of Southern California said Friday that it would pay $215 million to settle claims of sexual abuse and harassment by a school gynecologist, but lawyers for hundreds of the accusers say it's not enough money and the university has yet to fully disclose what it knew about the doctor's behavior.
The tentative settlement, which needs a judge's approval, will provide compensation ranging from $2,500 up to $250,000 to women who say Dr. George Tyndall abused them between 1988 and 2016, USC Interim President Wanda Austin said in a statement.
About 500 current and former students have now made accusations against Tyndall and filed various lawsuits. They contend he routinely made crude comments, took inappropriate photos, forced them to strip naked and groped them under the guise of medical treatment.
The settlement specifically applies to a pending federal class-action lawsuit that involves a fraction of the overall accusers, but is open to every woman who ever had an appointment with the gynecologist.
Three attorneys representing nearly 300 alleged victims say they're strongly advising their clients against joining the federal action so they can continue their fight in state court instead.

"The only guaranteed number in this case is $2,500 — $2,500 won't even get you a 50-yard-line seat at a USC football game, let alone compensate somebody for being sexually assaulted by their doctor when they were 18 or 17," said John Manly, an attorney who represents 180 accusers.
Attorney Gloria Allred, who represents 36 women who have accused Tyndall, said in a statement that the amount of money under the proposed settlement is "way too minimal."
"In our opinion, for what some of the victims went through, this is a nuisance amount and may not properly compensate victims for what some of them have suffered," she said.
Manly also criticized the proposed settlement as failing to hold USC accountable and an effort to cap future monetary damages.
"We still don't know when did USC first know, how often were they warned, what administrators were involved, was there criminal conduct?" Manly said. "Our clients, more than anything, want those answers and people held accountable, not alleged victims say they're but to protect the future women at USC."

U.S. government asks Supreme Court to halt climate lawsuit

EUGENE (AP) — The federal government has again asked the U.S. Supreme Court to intervene in a climate change lawsuit filed by a group of young people that is scheduled to go to trial in Oregon later this month.
The Register-Guard reports government attorneys filed a mandamus petition Thursday seeking to dismiss the case, which aims to force the government to take action on climate change.
A group of 21 young people filed the suit in 2015, arguing that the federal government's actions violate their constitutional rights. The suit seeks a court order directing the government to stop permitting, authorizing and subsidizing fossil fuels, and to work to stabilize the climate.
The trial is scheduled to begin Oct. 29 in U.S. District Court in Eugene.

Woman sues Bank of America after losing $13K in scam

PORTLAND (AP) — An Oregon woman is suing Bank of America, claiming a Hillsboro branch transferred $13,000 from her account to scammers.
The Oregonian/OregonLive reports Rebekah "Becky" Adams filed the lawsuit this week, claiming a teller failed to inform her that the money she wanted transferred was actually sent to a different Bank of America account.
The lawsuit claims the teller transferred the money despite the bank placing a flag on the account, warning of past suspicious or fraudulent activity.
According to the suit, Adams tried to stop the transfer, and the bank claimed it was able to "delete" the transfer and that her money was back in her account.
A Bank of America representative says the company is investigating the complaint.
