Harry Shum Jr.

Dancing his way to the top

By Shona Dustan
TV Media

Some people seem to be born with the knowledge of what they're meant to do with their lives, but most of us are forced to figure it out slowly and sometimes painfully. Watching Harry Shum Jr. perform certainly leaves one with the impression that he was always meant for the limelight, but actually it was a high school dare that set him on a path to fame. Shum was born in Costa Rica to Chinese parents, and his family moved to San Francisco when he was 6 years old. He excelled at sports and enjoyed theater, so when his friends dared him to try out for his high school dance team, he thought it would be funny to give it a try. After all, he had the required physicality and theatrical nature — why not see what happens when those two strengths meet? The result surprised him. He picked up dance moves quickly and enjoyed every minute. He idolized stars such as Ginuwine and Usher and used them as his initial inspiration, but he soon grew to include steps inspired by Fred Astaire and Gene Kelly. He pursued an acting career, which began with spots in shows such as "Boston Public" and "Greek," and he found roles that incorporated his dancing in projects such as "You Got Served" (2004), "Stomp the Yard" (2007) and "Center Stage: Turn It Up" (2008). This combination of experience and skill is what landed him his big break: a role in the Fox megahit "Glee." Shum's role was initially a small, recurring one; he played Mike Chang who, in the first season, everyone knew only as "Other Asian." His character spoke little but danced a lot, and he stole every scene he was in. By Season 3, Shum was promoted to series regular and given increasingly central storylines that showcased his many talents, which included singing — a real triple threat! "Glee" launched him into new opportunities, and he went on to star in a number of films and series such as "Caper," "Mortal Kombat: Legacy," "Fire City: End of Days" (2015) and "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon: Sword of Destiny" (2016). Since 2016, Shum has starred in the ensemble drama "Shadowhunters," which is based on the book series "The Mortal Instruments." He plays Magnus Bane, the High Warlock of Brooklyn, an ancient being who helps the titular shadowhunters as they try to rid the world of demons. He is the love interest of Alec Lightwood (Matthew Daddario, "Cabin Fever," 2016), and the show's positive and progressive treatment of their relationship has been celebrated by the LGBTQ community. Part 2 of the final season of "Shadowhunters" premieres Monday, Feb. 25, on Freeform.

- Was one of the Screen Actors Guild ambassadors at the 2019 SAG Awards

QUOTES:

"It's strange that I am full Chinese and born in a Latin country, but I love the fact that I was immersed in that culture at birth while maintaining my Chinese roots."

"I know what my talents are, and at the end of the day I'm an actor who can dance."

Mary Queen of Scots

After her husband's death, Scotland's 19-year-old Catholic Queen Mary (Ronan) returns to her home country to claim her throne, where she clashes with the protestant leader John Knox (Tennant), whom she dismisses from her court. Meanwhile, in the neighboring kingdom of England, the young protestant Queen Elizabeth (Robbie) views her cousin Mary's claim as a threat, especially with religious turmoil brewing between their two faiths. When Mary accepts a marriage proposal from a powerful English noble, Queen Elizabeth realizes that she may have to take drastic action to keep her hold on her throne secure.

Director: Josie Rourke. Stars: Saoirse Ronan, Margot Robbie, David Tennant, Guy Pearce, Jack Lowden. 2018. 124 min. Drama.
