The return of Tiger: Woods looks for second major of the year at the PGA Championship

By Ryan Guebert
TV Media

The PGA Tour's second major tournament of the year teed off at Bethpage State Park on Thursday, May 16, and is set for final round action of the PGA Championship on Sunday, May 19. Tune in to CBS for live coverage of all the action with Jim Nantz anchoring the play-by-play commentary.
For the first time since his fall from grace in 2009, which included a highly publicized divorce and prolonged injuries, Tiger Woods is finally back in the headlines for his outstanding play on the golf course. Woods had been the subject of discussion leading up to the PGA Championship following his Masters victory from a month ago. His win at the Masters marked the end of a decade-long gap between major wins and has been heralded as the greatest sports comeback since that of Muhammad Ali in 1971. The win also brought Woods into the top 10 of the Official World Golf Ranking at No. 6.

Woods managed to win his fifth green jacket at the Masters in come-from-behind fashion. He opened the tournament with a round of 70 but entered the leaderboard in the second round. He started slowly in the third round but was able to set himself up in good position entering the final round in second position. Woods' main threat during the tournament was Italian golfer Francesco Molinari, who struggled in the final round and could not keep pace with Woods, who bogeyed the final hole and claimed a one-shot victory.

See if Woods can continue to climb the golf rankings with a win at Bethpage State Park as he looks to match Jack Nicklaus' record of five PGA Championship titles. A second major championship win in 2019 could even spark life in the conversation of Woods pursuing another career grand slam. Tune in for final round action of the 101st PGA Championship on Sunday, May 19, with live coverage on CBS.
