The fray on clay: Halep looks to defend title, Federer returns to French Open

By Ryan Guebert
TV Media

The second Grand Slam tennis tournament is underway at Stade Roland Garros for the 2019 French Open. There is plenty to watch for as third-round action is served on Saturday, June 1, with live coverage on NBC.

All eyes are on Simona Halep, who entered the tournament looking to defend her title from last year. After reaching four Grand Slam tournament finals, her French Open title is the first Grand Slam win of her professional career. After 48 weeks at the top of the WTA rankings, Halep lost her No. 1 ranking to newcomer Naomi Osaka following Osaka's Australian Open win in January. At only 21 years of age, Osaka has already won two Grand Slam titles and only needs wins at the French Open and Wimbledon to earn a career Grand Slam.

Roger Federer is competing in the spring clay season for the first time in three years. Given his age of 37, the Swiss tennis great has normally chosen to rest during the spring months and focus on his strength of competing on hard and grass surfaces. This is his first French Open since his straight-set quarter-final defeat to Stan Wawrinka in 2015. This year's tournament also marks the 10-year anniversary since Federer's first and only French

Open title, in 2009. If Federer hopes to celebrate another French Open title, he will more than likely have to do it against "king of clay" Rafael Nadal, who is looking to threepeat as champion for the third time in his career (including a record five-year run from 2010 to 2014) and win his 12th French Open title.

See if Halep can defend her French Open title from last year or if Osaka sets herself up for a non-calendar year Grand Slam heading into Wimbledon in July. Also, don't miss Federer's return to the clay courts at Roland Garros after a three-year hiatus. Catch third-round action of the French Open on Saturday, June 1, with live coverage on NBC.
