Final leg of the Triple Crown series kicks off

By Ryan Guebert
TV Media

Following the dramatic result of the Kentucky Derby and the news that there would not be a Triple Crown winner this year, the 151st running of the Belmont Stakes is set to take place on Saturday, June 8, at Belmont Park in Elmont, New York. Tune in for the third and final leg of the Triple Crown series with live coverage on NBC.

Despite Maximum Security crossing the finish line first, stewards disqualified the horse after a 22-minute review for shifting positions and impeding another horse, ultimately making Maximum Security the first Kentucky Derby winner to be disqualified for an on-track infraction.

Second-place finisher Country House was awarded the victory and became the second-longest odds Kentucky Derby winner, at 65-1, after Donerail in 1913, who entered the race at 91-1 odds. Shortly after the Kentucky Derby, Country House's trainer Bill Mott announced that he would miss the Preakness Stakes due to health concerns, ultimately ending any chance of a Triple Crown winner.

The traditions at the Belmont Stakes are just as noteworthy as the race itself. Over its 152-year history, the race has been nicknamed "The Test of the Champion" and "The Run for the Carnations." This is in reference to the race's 1.5-mile length (the longest of the three Triple Crown races), as well as the winning horse being draped with a blanket of white carnations after the race. A recording of Frank Sinatra's "New York, New York" is played during the post parade while the crowd applauds the horses and indulges in the race's official drink, known as the "Belmont Jewel." The winner of the Belmont Stakes is ceremonially presented with the August Belmont Trophy, which was designed by Paulding Farnham for Tiffany & Co. in 1896.

Unlike last year's hype surrounding Justify and Mike E. Smith, there won't be a Triple Crown hopeful in this year's Belmont Stakes, but there is still plenty to watch out for leading up to the race. Tune in Saturday, June 8, to see who crosses the finish line first in the final leg of the Triple Crown series. Catch the race and the traditions at Belmont Park with live coverage on NBC.
