Oregon man, former student convicted of hate crime pleads to new charge

CORVALLIS (AP) — A former Oregon State University graduate student convicted of a hate crime last year has pleaded guilty to another charge.

The Corvallis Gazette-Times reported Thursday that 29-year-old Andrew Joseph Oswald pleaded guilty to second-degree criminal mischief in Benton County court Wednesday for damaging a sign in July 2017.

Oswald agreed to a sentence including 12 months of probation, 40 hours of community service, restitution, and fees.

Prosecutors say Oswald defaced a lawn sign in Corvallis with a sticker featuring the same racist message that resulted in an earlier conviction.

Oswald was found guilty in November of first-degree intimidation, a felony hate crime, for placing racist bumper stickers on the cars of activists in June 2017 in the city 83 miles south of Portland.
