DRIVING SAFETY | BE PREPARED

Have Accurate Directions

Have you ever gotten stuck in an unsafe situation because you're simply lost?

Maybe you've had to stop and ask directions in a potentially dangerous neighborhood? You can avoid these situations simply by mapping out your route before you hit the road.

With today's technology, it's easy to find a navigation application that works for you. There are many mobile options for your smartphone, or you could invest in a GPS system that mounts into your vehicle.

Whatever option you choose, make sure you're comfortable using it and that you keep it updated with the latest mapping information. This will require checking your software for update requirements to give you the most accurate travel information.

STUDY YOUR ROUTE

It's always a good idea to study your route before leaving your home. You never know when technology may fail and leave you hanging in a location you don't recognize, especially on longer trips into unfamiliar spots.

Have a good idea of where you're going by reviewing the entire route. Once you punch in your destination into your navigation application, there should be an option to see a travel overview that maps out each turn you'll take on your trip.

You can even print out the directions to have a backup set in case you get lost.

PHONE A FRIEND

If you have someone in your network who has been to an area to which you're traveling, be sure to ask them for any shortcuts or roads to avoid.

Our friends and family can be great sources of information that can help prevent us from getting to unsafe driving situations.

Maybe you know someone who lives locally in the area you're headed. They may have the latest scoop on construction or road closures of which you may not be aware.
