Pets and Cars

As fun as a good pet road trip can be, there are certain measures to remember as you try to be the safest driver possible.

into a longer time period that could potentially harm your pet. If it's too hot for you to comfortably sit in a parked car with no air conditioning, it's too hot for your pet.

BUCKLE THEM UP

Just as you should always wear your seatbelt, your pet should always be properly restrained while in the vehicle. That means using a secure harness or a carrier.

Why is this so important? A loose pet can be a major distraction to your driving or get stuck under a seat. They could also be injured or killed by the airbag if sitting in your lap during an accident. Unrestrained pets could also be thrown through windows or windshields in a collision.

AVOID PICKUP TRUCK BEDS

There are many dangers associated with letting your pet ride in the bed of a pickup truck. Dogs can fall or jump from the truck bed and be injured or killed on impact. They could also be struck by another vehicle if they fell out of the bed.

The American Veterinary Medical Association recommends using a secured and appropriately sized and ventilated dog kennel if you must travel with them in the bed of your truck. This will keep them secure as you drive around town.

NEVER LEAVE YOUR PET PARKED

Hundreds of pets die each year from heat exhaustion because they are left in parked vehicles. According to the American Veterinary Medical Association, the temperature inside your vehicle can rise almost 20 degrees Fahrenheit in just 10 minutes. In 20 minutes, it can rise almost 30 degrees.

If you are delayed in a store or run into someone you know, this time can add up quickly for your pet. All of a sudden, a quick run into the store turns
