Suspect in death of California officer has violent history

By DON THOMPSON AND OLGA R. RODRIGUEZ
 Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — A man who was accused of domestic violence several times gunned down a rookie California police officer and continued firing, preventing other officers from reaching their wounded colleague for 45 minutes, authorities said Thursday.
 An armored vehicle eventually was used to reach Officer Tara O'Sullivan and take her to a hospital, where she later died.
 O'Sullivan, 26, and other officers were helping a woman gather her belongings from a Sacramento home as part of a domestic violence call when the shooting occurred Wednesday evening.
 A day later, police had not revealed key details about what happened, including whether the man was already on the property when officers arrived, where on the property the shooting occurred, or why it took so long for O'Sullivan to be pulled to safety.
 Police identified the suspect as 45-year-old Adel Sambrano Ramos of Sacramento and said his standoff with police lasted eight hours, with five officers firing their weapons.
 Ramos was in custody and scheduled to appear in court Monday.
 A relative of Ramos said the woman being helped by O'Sullivan was the suspect's girlfriend. She was not injured.
 "We are devastated," Deputy Chief Dave Peletta said about the death of O'Sullivan. "There are no words to convey the depth of sadness we feel or how heartbroken we are for the family of our young, brave officer."

 O'Sullivan is the first Sacramento police officer to be killed on the job in two decades.
 She and several other officers arrived at the home at 5:41 p.m. on Wednesday and within a half-hour O'Sullivan was hit with gunfire, police said. The gunman kept firing, and at 6:54 p.m. additional officers responded to retrieve O'Sullivan. She was transported within five minutes to UC Davis Medical Center, where she died.
 She graduated from the police academy in December and was working with a training officer. She was expected to be on her own in a couple of weeks, Peletta said. The department's next group of 56 young recruits was graduating Thursday night in a ceremony that is likely to serve as a remembrance of O'Sullivan.
 A native of the San Francisco Bay Area, O'Sullivan was a member of the first class of a law enforcement training program at California State University, Sacramento. She completed the training program and also graduated with a degree in child development.

 "She had a big heart, a strong mind, a great personality. She made you smile — she is exactly what we need in the police force," said Robert Nelson, the university president. The school plans to launch a scholarship in O'Sullivan's honor.
 Melissa Repa, director of the career center, recalled watching O'Sullivan go through an obstacle and ropes course in the rain during her first day in the university training program. She didn't let her small stature stop her.
 "Nothing would get in her way of climbing and surmounting her goals," she said through tears.
 Orlando Ramos, the younger brother of the suspect, told The Associated Press that Adel Ramos is estranged from his family.
 He sent his condolences to the officer's family.

"If he goes to prison for the rest of his life, I could care less," Orlando Ramos said. "I'm a lot more heartbroken for seeing the pain in my mother and for the police officer and her family than I am for him going to prison."
 Court filings show a warrant was issued for Ramos just nine days before the shooting when he failed to appear in court on a November misdemeanor battery charge involving a female minor. Online court records show he also faced misdemeanor charges in 2001 and 1998, and a 1995 traffic violation.
 Muhammed Ilyas, who lives near the scene of the shooting, said Ramos had a history of harassing a black family that lived next door and even threatened the three children with kitchen knives as they played outside.
 He frequently shouted racial slurs at the family, said Ilyas, who identified Ramos as the man living there when shown a photo.
