Lost over the Blue mountains, Lieut. J.M. Fetters, army aviator who landed here Saturday afternoon after a flight from Seattle, had to descend at Imbler and get his bearings yesterday before reaching Walla Walla. Fetters left here at 3:30 and did not reach Walla Walla until 6:10. Sunday visitors at Bingham Springs saw him pass over that resort, headed east, at 4 o'clock. Lieutenant Fetters' flight was the first crossing of the Blue mountains ever made by airplane. The aviator lost his bearings by following the Umatilla river, which was not marked on his chart.

Sid and Walt Seale, Condon brothers, have been named co-grand marshals of the 1969 Pendleton Round-Up Westward Ho! parade, Jack Howard, parade director, announced today. The Seale brothers were among the first competitors in the show back in 1910 and contributed a great deal to the Round-Up's success in later years. Howard, in announcing their selection, said this is a continuation of the policy of picking, when possible, a former Round-Up figure of outstanding status to serve as grand marshal. The policy has brought back many early day stars, including the late Hoot Gibson, Sam Garrett, Henry Collins and others.

Lexington's Tiffanie Munkers finished third in barrel racing. Kim Kammenzind of Milton-Free-water also earned a national berth with a fourth place finish in the barrels. Athena's Erin Ely finished second in breakaway roping and Mandi DUBY of Pendleton will make the trek to Wyoming as well after finishing fourth in the same event. In boys' action, Pendleton's Travis DUBY teamed with Harper's Michael Coleman to finish fourth in team roping. Tygh Campbell, also of Pendleton, placed third in steer wrestling.

Thought for Today: "If you look at life one way, there is always cause for alarm." — Elizabeth Bowen, Irish author (1899-1973).

DEAR ABBY

Dear Abby: My ex-husband and I have been divorced for five years. I have sole custody of our 6-year-old son, "Charlie." My ex lives five hours away with his current wife and her four children. He makes time to see our son only a few times a year.

Anytime he drives down to see Charlie, he always brings someone with him, whether it's his wife or one of her kids. He has never once come alone to spend quality one-on-one time with his son. I have asked him several times to come by himself so he can bond with Charlie, but he refuses.

Charlie is having foot surgery next month and will be in the hospital overnight. My ex wants to be there, which I agree with. But he insists that his wife be there, too. I understand she's our son's stepmother, but she doesn't play an active role in Charlie's life, and I don't think it's her place to be there. Our son needs his mother and father and immediate family, not the "step" family.

Am I wrong to not want her or any of her family members there? I feel it's inappropriate and that my ex should do this on his own. And, no, I don't have any feelings for him, and I do not want him back. I also hold no ill feelings toward his current wife.

— Struggling in the South
Dear Struggling: Your ex, his wife and her kids are a package deal. Accept this and be glad he visits his son. Surgery is no fun and can be intimidating for a child. When it's time for the procedure, your son may need all the moral support he can get. So take the high road and be warm and welcoming. Your function is to support your boy, not be his gatekeeper. And if history is prologue, I doubt they'll stick around long.

Dear Abby: I recently went skydiving with my beautiful best friend, "Brenda." At the airport, she overheard the skydiving instructor say he wanted "the pretty one." He was talking about me.

Brenda took me aside and complained to me that he found me more attractive than her. Abby, usually she's the one who gets all the second looks from guys. She was really annoyed that I got that kind of attention. This has left me wondering, what kind of best friend is she? I have never competed with her. What should I do? — Bestie in Kansas

Dear Bestie: Take a fresh look at your relationship with her. Recognize that although you have never competed with Brenda, she appears to feel competitive with you. If the subject of the incident at the airport comes up again, remind her that although she is usually the one who gets the attention from guys, this was your turn. A true friend would be happy to share some of the spotlight.
