BOATING GUIDE | BACK TO BASICS

Self-Propelled Boating

Recreational boats with motors get a lot of attention thanks to their amenities and speed. If you can't get enough of the water, consider traveling in a more traditional way. Paddling from the seat of a self-propelled boat can give you a deeper appreciation for nature while providing you with awesome health benefits.

Traveling with canoes or kayaks is much easier than towing larger vessels with a trailer. With a professionally installed rack on the roof, even passenger cars can safely transport these compact boats from storage to the lake.

When deciding to hop into the world of kayaking, here are some important factors to consider.

SAFETY TIPS

If you are unfamiliar with navigating water in a unique boat like a canoe or kayak, you can benefit from taking safety or development courses. Here, you will learn the correct paddling techniques through calm waters and how to handle emergencies you encounter. Consider these other safety tips from the American Canoe Organization.

Wear a life jacket. Plan to capsize while boating, sometimes rough conditions can overturn you without notice.

Make sure to dress in thermal wear when paddling in cool water. Frigid temperatures can be deadly if unprepared.

Make a path of your expected route and plan for intermediate rest stops to refuel yourself.

THE RIGHT GEAR

Finding the correct gear for your new hobby includes more than choosing a suitable boat. Bringing along the right equipment will enhance the comfort and safety of the experience. Here are some items to invest in.

Find a waterproof bag to store dry clothes, foods and other important items. Make sure to secure it to your boat in case of a capsize. A weather radio will keep you updated on possible threats along your path. Give yourself plenty of time to reach shore if you are threatened by severe conditions. Bring along flares and whistles in case you find yourself in danger and require help. A cell phone is a great tool for emergencies, but you may find yourself in an area without signal.
