WINE GUIDE | TYPES OF WINE

Craft Wines

Craft beers, or those from small breweries, have been popular for years. Now, craft wines are on the rise. According to the Craft Wine Association, a certified craft wine is a commercially available, small-production wine made in a total run of fewer than 5,000 cases.

Authenticity and traceability are key components in certification, as well. With the growth of eating local movements, craft wines are poised for a big 2019 and massive growth.

FINDING A CRAFT WINE
In addition to networking with local wine stores, you can also consult the Craft Wine Association to find bottles and wineries to your liking. You can also spend the day exploring local wineries and tasting wines and finding new tastes. Wineries aren't just in California; most states have at least one.

IT'S ABOUT THE STORY
Moreso than wines made by big wineries, craft wines have a story to tell. The story of the farmer and the winemaker, and even of the region in which they are produced. If you're going to travel, look for local craft wines to pick up. They make great souvenirs and gifts.

BEWARE
Just like with the craft beer movement, some wines may be mass produced wines masquerading as a craft bottle. Lean on the experts at your wine store. Also look for the following subtle clues outlined by wine merchant Winestyr. Look at the label for phrases like "grown, produced and bottled by." Also look for locations. The more specific the location, the more likely you're holding a craft wine.
