What Are Lederhosen, Anyway?

Those funny looking green shorts became the official costume of the Oktoberfest in 1960. But, they're way more than just a weird costume. Here's more about lederhosen, the official costume of the Oktoberfest.

HARD WORK, SHORT PANTS

The knee-length deerskin shorts were originally worn during hard physical work, where they were more durable than fabric pants. Popularity of the traditional work clothes dropped off sharply in the 19th century, considered uncouth peasants' clothes.

In the 1880s, clubs formed in Munich and other cities that sought to preserve traditional rural clothing. It was then that the garment, previously worn throughout central Europe, became closely associated with Bavaria.

FESTIVAL GEAR

Now lederhosen are considered a symbol of virility and masculinity. Men wear them working outdoors or doing other outside activities, but also to folk festivals and beer gardens, much like the Scottish kilt. All lederhosen have two side pockets, a hip pocket, a knife pocket and a drop front. For Oktoberfest, the wearer may also done haverlschuhe, or stockings, and a classic white shirt.

DIRNDL

This is the feminine version of lederhosen, the dirndl is also based on Alpine peasant wear. The skirt is a light circular cut, gathered at the waist, and falling below the knee. It is worn with a bodice and a blouse with short, puffed sleeves, and usually an apron. For the winter, dirndl includes heavy skirts and thick fabrics, designed for warmth. Colors and accessories vary from region to region and even town to town.

OTHER ACCESSORIES

What's a festival without a stylish chapeau? Tirolerhute, or Bavarian hats, are popular during Oktoberfest. The jaunty little hat is crowned with a tuft of chamois hair, once highly prized. The more or bigger tufts you had, the richer you were. Now, of course, imitation chamois hair makes this a poor gauge of wealth.

You can see all this pomp and finery on display on parade during the Oktoberfest on the first festival Sunday. Participants in a glittering array of historical costumes march about four miles from the Maximillaneum to the Oktoberfest grounds. The parade includes costumes, of course, but also rifle clubs, bands, flags, and decorated carriages, horses and carts. The clubs in the parade come from all over Europe.
