Oktoberfest Glossary

If you're not fluent in German, never fear. We're here to help. Here are some words and phrases you might hear around an Oktoberfest celebration.

Wiesn: Another name for the granddaddy of them all, the Munich Oktoberfest. It comes from the colloquial name for the fairgrounds, Theresa's meadows, or Theresienwiese.

O'zapft is! Translation: It is tapped! Traditional words that open the fest as the first keg of beer is tapped.

Ein Prosit der Gemütlichkeit: A traditional drinking song at the Munich festival, which roughly translates to "a toast to cheer and good times."

Bierzelt: A beer tent. The Munich Oktoberfest (and many others) are a string of booths, tents and pavilions serving great beer, good food and music.

Brezel or brezn: A pretzel, usually sprinkled with coarse salt.

Maßkrug: A glass mug of beer equal to a liter. Usually shortened to a maß.

Schweinshaxe: A stewed pork knuckle, usually served with sauerkraut or knödel, which are potato dumplings.

Weißwurst: A Bavarian sausage made from minced veal, pork bacon, spices and herbs. It's usually served before noon, in a bowl of hot water, along with sweet mustard, a pretzel and wheat beer.

Hendl: Roast chicken, another traditional Oktoberfest dish.

Schnitzel: Tender, boneless meat fried in flour and bread-crumbs.

Spätzle: Egg noodles or dumplings.

Wurst: Generally, sausage.

Die Bierleichen: Beer corpses. The name for those snoring off a maß too many.

Prost: Cheers!

Gemütlichkeit: A general feeling of goodwill toward your fellow man. Not feeling it yet? Have another maß.

Radler: A half-beer, half-soft drink, also served in a liter mug. For those in it for the long haul.

Altbier: A dark beer with malted barley from the Düsseldorf area.

Bockbier, doppelbock: Strong beers that originate from Einbeck and are around 7% alcohol.

Weizenbier, weissbier: A wheat beer popular in Bavaria. A Hefeweizen is more yeasty, while Kristallweizen is clearer and fizzier. Around 5.4% alcohol with a fruity, spicy taste.

Märzen: A full-bodied, strongly malty beer associated with Oktoberfest.

Leipziger gose: A tart beer flavored with salt and coriander. It's usually served with cherry or almond liqueur.

Malzbier: Literally, malt beer. Sweet, aromatic, and brewed mainly in Bavaria and Baden-Württemberg.
