BIG GAME PARTY PLANNING | FOOD

Nacho Average Party

Cheesy, gooey nachos go great with football and they easily feed a crowd. For your Super Bowl party, please even the pickiest eaters with a nacho bar that will allow your guests to make their own delicious dish.

GO BOWLING

Bowls are the best way to go for a nacho bar. Plates can get tough to manage if the chips are piled high (and they will be). Pick a pack of disposable bowls with a football theme for easy clean up. Bowls can also more easily contain drips of salsa, cheese, sour cream, guac, black beans ...

FIXINS

We should probably get on to what to put on that nacho bar.

Start off with the right chip. If you have gluten-free guests, most corn tortilla chips are gluten free. Just look for the GF symbol somewhere on the bag. You can also get chips that are low sodium for guests watching their salt. If you want to kick it up a notch, look for blue corn chips, red corn chips, chips bathed in chili and/or lime, and much more at your local grocer. Put them out in giant, clearly labeled bowls.

Next comes the glue that holds it all together, the cheese. You can go the easy route and buy a variety of jarred cheese dips that can be heated up and poured into warming trays or a waiting slow cooker. Also buy shredded cheeses for sprinkling over the finished product.

Now for the protein. Grilled chicken strips, browned ground beef with taco seasoning, fajita steak strips, black beans, grilled shrimp, browned chorizo all good choices for your nacho bar. Keep each item toasty in a warming tray and watch how long items like shrimp are left out.

For the rest of the bar, put out an assortment of toppings and condiments. Grilled peppers and onions are a good start, along with salsa, guacamole, refried beans or bean dip, sour cream and the usual staples. Go long with sliced limes, pico de gallo, tomatillo salsa, fresh sliced avocado (coat lightly in lime juice to keep it from turning brown), grilled vegetables, rice, jalapeños, and chopped fresh cilantro.

SAFETY FIRST

Remember to keep cold things cold by balancing a small bowl of your food in a larger bowl of ice. Also put a serving spoon in each dish to avoid cross contamination.
