Games for Everyone

Not everyone (thinking of the kids here) will want to sit and watch hours of football. Have a plan on hand for your smallest guests, too, and the bigger ones that just can't watch football for hours.

TOURNEY TIME

Set up a room of your house for board games, card game or video game tournaments. Make a bracket and have an older kid or an adult be in charge. Have age-appropriate prizes for first, second and third place. Some favorites that are just as fun to watch as they are to play include Jenga and Hedbanz.

BIG SCREENS

Set up an outdoor projector and screen a favorite film on the side of your house or on your garage door. Let the kids snuggle up in blankets with popcorn and hot cocoa and watch a show that's just for them.

FLAG FOOTBALL

If it's just that some people need to move their feet, here's a great idea for before the game or the half. Just remember to enforce no tackles. If there's one bad place to watch the Super Bowl, it's from the ER.

BUILD IT

If someone's got an epic building block collection and is willing to share, have kids and adults alike build a giant cityscape. Bonus points if it's Miami.

OUTSIDE GAMES

Weather cooperating, make an outside playspace of popular tailgating games, like ring toss, horseshoes, cornhole and more. Again, you can set up a bracket and let the games go until a champion is crowned.

INSIDE GAMES

It is January, after all, and the weather may not cooperate. To keep little hands busy, set up a crafting or coloring station (or both, depending on your guests and the length of your party). It can be as easy as rolling out a roll of shelf paper on a folding table and letting them go to town with washable crayons and markers. Other ideas: painting rocks, making jewelry or necklaces, coloring pages and books.
