Start a Long-Term Project

Which long-term projects have been on your to-do list? Redesigning rooms in your home? Painting your home's interior? Starting a garden? Designing your landscaping?

There's no time like the present to tackle these jobs and make the most of your time at home.

The first step is planning your project. Turn to Pinterest or other websites for inspiration to get you motivated. Then use these tips for a successful project.

GET A PROJECT MANAGEMENT TOOL

A basic spreadsheet will do to get you organized and plan out your work. If you're more visual, however, an online project management platform such as Basecamp or Asana can help you manage your project in a more visual way. Set tasks and milestones for yourself, or assign them to others who will be helping with your project, and check in often to see how you've progressed.

If your task is more creative in nature, put all your visual ideas together using an Evernote notebook or a Pinterest board. If you're redesigning a room in your home, make a photo collage of all the different products you find to see the whole picture.

GATHER YOUR MATERIALS

Which materials do you have? Can you borrow equipment from friends or neighbors? Can you rent large pieces of equipment instead of buying? Take stock of what you can borrow or rent before making a shopping list.

Online shopping is a great option right now, but be sure to contact local businesses first to see how you can shop local. (Local businesses need your support now more than ever.) Although some local retailers' stores are closed, many are providing curbside pickup of merchandise to minimize exposure.

MAKE TIME

We all have daily responsibilities to meet. Plan out small chunks of time each day to chip away at your project tasks. Don't pressure yourself to get a project done quickly, and be realistic with your schedule. If you have children, help teach them practical skills by giving them tasks to do.
