"The White Tiger" (2021)

Watch as the transformation of a lifetime takes place in "The White Tiger," a new film coming to Netflix on Friday, Jan. 22. Based on Indian author Aravind Adiga's bestselling debut novel of the same name from 2008, "The White Tiger" follows Balram (Adarsh Gourav, "Die Trying"), a young man working as a driver for a wealthy couple who has just returned to India from the United States. Brought up his entire life to desire nothing other than the "highest honor of being a servant to a rich master" — as most young children in his village were — Balram works tirelessly to make himself indispensable to his masters, Ashok (Rajkumar Rao, "Newton," 2017) and Pinky (Priyanka Chopra Jonas, "Quantico"), in the hopes of getting a promotion from driver to servant. Truly steadfast in trying to attain his goal, it isn't until Pinky questions his truest desires that Balram realizes he wants more for himself than what he has been taught to want all his life. Awakening an unstoppable force within him, Balram narrates the story of his rise from lowly driver to successful entrepreneur, with no shortage of corruption, deceit and struggle along the way. Adapted for the screen and directed by "Fahrenheit 451" (2018) producer Ramin Bahrani, this rags-to-riches tale also stars Perrie Kaperanos ("Yeh Ballet," 2020), Nalneesh Neel ("Bhor: Dawn," 2018) and up-and-coming child actor Vedant Sinha ("The Family Man," 2019).

"Fate: The Winx Saga"

Get in touch with nature and find your element with "Fate: The Winx Saga," coming to Netflix on Friday, Jan. 22. Based upon Iginio Straffi's ("Club 57") animated series, "Winx Club," on Nickelodeon, this young adult drama follows a group of teenage fairies — Bloom (Abigail Cowen, "Chilling Adventures of Sabrina"), Stella (Hannah van der Westhuisen, "The Fugitives"), Musa (Elisha Applebaum, "Carly & Paolo," 2017), Aisha (Precious Mustapha, "The Stranger") and Terra (Eliot Salt, "Normal People") — as they attend an Otherworld boarding school and learn to harness their mystical powers. Focusing largely on Bloom as she manifests her element and comes to terms with the dangerous nature of her powers, those around her begin to realize that they might just be in the presence of the most powerful fairy of their time. With Straffi on board as an executive producer alongside showrunner Brian Young ("The Vampire Diaries") and a team of others, this six-episode series-debuting season is expected to be a darker version of the animated kids' show. Danny Griffin ("The Gentlemen," 2019), Freddie Thorp ("Safe"), Sadie Soverall ("Rose Plays Julie," 2019) and Robert James-Collier ("Downton Abbey") also star.

"Busted!" Season 3

Join in the fun and try to solve more of the mysteries as Netflix's premiere hit South Korean game show, "Busted!," returns for a third season Friday, Jan. 22, on the streamer. Solving a new mystery in each episode, "Busted!" features a group of seven detectives — each a celebrity in his or her own right — who must work together under the guise of an operation called Project D, wherein each of them was implanted with DNA belonging to a famous detective from history. Together they must solve a series of small mysteries that will (hopefully) eventually lead them to solving the biggest one of all: What happened during Project D? In Season 3, the team welcomes Season 1 main cast member Lee Kwang-soo ("It's Okay, That's Love") back to the scene alongside other series regulars Kim Jong-min ("Master Key"), comedian and T.V. host Yoo Jae-suk ("Running Man"), YouTuber Park Min-young ("When the Weather is Fine"), rapper and actor Oh Se-hun (of the Exo video short series), singer and actress Kim Se-jeong ("I Wanna Hear Your Song") and singer/actor/entertainer/host Lee Seung-gi ("The King 2 Hearts") who joined the cast for the first time last season. Expected to run for 10 episodes as with its previous two seasons, "Busted!" is full of ridiculous fun and hilarious infusions of comedy.
