DEAR ABBY

Story of wrongful conviction is shared without permission

JEANNE

ADVICE

Dear Abby: I'm a gay man in my late 40s, partnered with a man in his late 50s. There are a lot of issues from my past that I try hard to move beyond and let go of. I was wrongly accused and convicted of a crime I didn't commit, for which I was sentenced to life in

I sat in prison seven years before I was able to prove my innocence and regain my freedom. Even then, I was forced to accept certain requirements to keep my freedom, regardless of being proven innocent. Unfortunately, I'm finding it difficult because my partner keeps sharing my story with people who are complete strangers to me. When they meet me, the first words out of their mouths are things like: "You poor man, I'm so sorry," or "Wow, I can't believe you went through that," and "Man, you must be a strong person to have gotten through that."

How do I move past this, if he keeps telling people a story that is not his to tell, but mine to disclose if I choose to do so? The shame and embarrassment of facing this trauma of my past on a regular basis isn't healthy for me. How can I get him to understand that he needs to stop doing it?

I'm afraid to say anything to him about it. He dismisses my feelings most of the time when I bring up things he does that upset me.

I love this man with all of my heart. He was one of only two people who stood by me during my trauma and made it possible to prove my innocence. He was also my "first." My love for him has only grown over the years, but this issue of my story being revealed has to stop. — Frustrated in the Midwest

Dear Frustrated: You not only have to speak up, but you also have to be heard. That your much older partner dismisses your feelings is controlling and condescending. He has no right to disclose very personal information about you with strangers.

You wrote that this is your first relationship. If this continues, it may not be your last. Present it to your partner in exactly these terms. Couples counseling may save your relationship, but only if the balance of power is adjusted.

Dear Abby: I was friends with my guy before getting into a relationship with him seven years ago. The problem is, I feel like we are not growing. He is still living with his mom, we have no plans for the future, etc.

At least once a year, I ask him how he views our relationship, but I only get the same response that things are fine the way they are. I have now started back in college while maintaining a full-time job, but I'm so frustrated I feel like giving up on the relationship and moving on. I'm actually stuck between a breakup and keeping a friendship. Any advice? – Uncertain in Alabama

Dear Uncertain: Of course your "guy" thinks things are fine the way they are. They are — for him. I'm delighted you decided to return to college and get your degree. By doing so, you are taking control of your life, which is moving in the right direction.

Please understand that you may not only outgrow the relationship, but also this young man. By all means, keep him as a friend if you can. Be a role model if he's able to learn from your example, but continue to broaden your horizons.

DAYS GONE BY

100 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Feb. 20, 1921

"That's pretty stiff," said George Travis. "I'll just add six months to that," said the judge. Travis was inspired to his remark when Judge T. M. Schannep, in county court this morning, imposed a fine of $200 for a conviction on the charge of having liquor in his possession unlawfully. The judge was inspired by Travis' seeming impertinence. The jail sentence was later reduced to three months. Travis fell for the hold game. He took $7.50 from a state prohibition officer, bought him a pint of whisky and delivered it. He was arrested and taken to the county jail. Before getting behind the bars, Travis broke and ran through the jail yard and behind the Oregon Lumber yard. The officer and deputy sheriffs Lavender and Ridgway surrounded Travis and with two guns pointed at him he "reached for the moon." He started serving time today.

He handed me a dry, forked branch of a mulberry bush. "Try it yourself," he said. The stick bent lightly when I held it near a streaming faucet. Then the water witch placed his hands on mine and the forked stick almost yanked itself out of my hands. The world is full of water witches, and Umatilla County is no exception. Here are people who do routinely what appear to be almost acts of magic, although none of them think of it as magic. Many of them locate wells. Others can find water, metal or lost objects of any kind, including people. "Witching" for wanted things "is as old as time," said the Pendleton man who introduced me to the power his hands could generate in the dry mulberry branch. How does witching work? "An ionic field," says one water witch. "Extra sensory perception," says another. "Static electricity? Electromagnetic force? I don't know, but it works," says William Jordan of Stanfield, who uses a pair of brass welding rods to find not only water but metal.

Several days a week Pat Struthers wheels his light blue pickup through the twisty back roads of Eastern Oregon wheat country making house calls. "It's virgin territory pretty much," says Struthers, during a drive from Heppner to Hardman. "I'd say every other home probably has one." That would be a personal computer. Struthers and partner Steve Amsberry serve some of Eastern Oregon's most rural households as well as its small cities. The two own Eastern Oregon Computer Consulting, a Pendleton-based business that takes computer know-how where it's needed. Business has tripled each of the last three years from about $15,000 in part-time gross sales to $150,000 last year. The company's services are extensive, from hooking up a new computer to designing web pages for the Internet and teaching classes. Computers have been a hobby for Struthers since high school and Amsberry's skills began with a home-taught crash course. "You can't go to school to learn this," Amsberry said. "You have to have it in your hands.'
