It is with great sadness that the family of Paul Zummach announces his passing at the great old age of 93.

Paul was born in Ortonville, Minnesota, to Jacob and Florence (Lucille) Zummach. He enlisted in the Army and served as a hospital corpsman during WWII.

After the war he married Audrey

Lehman, whom he had met at a roller-skating party during high school. They moved to Lincoln, Nebraska, then to Hutchinson, Minnesota, where he was the manager of a hardwood furniture manufacturing plant. When the factory was purchased Paul went to work for Harris Pine Mills, the new owner, as manager of a plant in Healdsburg, California.

After being promoted to general manager of the redwood furniture division they moved to Pendleton, Oregon, where they lived for over 40 years. Paul was an avid bird

Gavin MacLeod, 'Love Boat' captain, dies at 90

By LYNN ELBER The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES Gavin MacLeod, the veteran supporting actor who achieved fame as sardonic TV news writer Murray Slaughter on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and stardom playing cheerful Capt. Stubing on "The Love Boat," has died. He was 90.

MacLeod died Saturday, May 29, at his home in Palm Desert, California, said Stephanie Steele Zalin, his stepdaughter. She attributed his death to his age, saying he had been well until recently.

"He had one of the most amazing, fun blasts of a life of anybody I know. He enjoyed every minute of it," Steele Zalin said. "I don't even think in his wildest dreams he dreamt of the life that he ended up having and creating."

She called him the "best, sweetest, purest guy."

> Ed Asner, who played opposite MacLeod on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," said on Twitter that "my heart is broken. Gavin was my brother, my partner in crime (and food) and my comic conspirator."

Known to sitcom fans for his bald head and wide smile, MacLeod toiled in near anonymity for more than a decade, appearing on dozens of TV shows and in several movies before landing the part of Murray in 1970.

He had originally tested for Moore's TV boss, Lou Grant, the role that went to Asner. Realizing he wasn't right for playing the blustery, short-tempered TV newsroom leader, MacLeod asked if he could try instead for the wisecracking TV news writer, his jokes often at the expense of the dimwitted anchorman Ted Baxter.

"The Mary Tyler Moore Show" was a smash from the start and remains a classic of situation comedies. It produced two spinoffs, "Rhoda" and "Phyllis," starring Valerie Harper and Cloris Leachman, respectively, who had portrayed Mary's neighbors.

It was still top-rated when Moore decided to end it after seven seasons.

MacLeod moved on to "The Love Boat," a romantic comedy in which guest stars, ranging from Gene Kelly to Janet Jackson, would come aboard for a cruise and fall in love with one another.

Although scorned by critics, the series proved immensely popular, lasting 11 seasons and spinning off several TV movies, including two in which MacLeod remained at the cruise ship's helm. It also resulted in his being hired as a TV pitchman for Princess Cruise Lines.

Among his final TV credits were "Touched by An Angel," "JAG" and "The King of Queens."

MacLeod's lighthearted screen persona was in contrast to his private life. In his 2013 memoir, "This Is Your Captain Speaking," MacLeod acknowledged that he had struggled with alcoholism in the 1960s and 1970s. He also wrote that losing his hair at an early age made it hard for him to find work as an actor.
