DEAR ABBY

After 23 years, husband reveals a frighteningly short fuse

Dear Abby: My husband and I have been together 23 years. A few years ago, he told a friend of his he wasn't in love with or attracted to me. I'm the same 5-foot-6-inch, 135-pound woman he married. Recently, he has become increasingly short-tempered.

JEANNE PHILLIPS ADVICE

He gets angry at every driver on the road, he destroyed the vacuum when it stopped working and recently went after our 10-pound rescue dog for peeing when he yelled at him. I intervened when he started screaming that he would kill the dog. He then turned on me, yelling and breaking things.

I've never seen him this angry, and I am afraid it's escalating and he will physically harm the dog or me. Is it time to leave? He's no longer the man I married. — Fearful in Texas

Dear Fearful: What you are describing is not normal behavior. Contact your doctor about the drastic change in your husband's personality because it could be symptomatic of a serious illness. After that, the next time he presents a physical danger, call the police and ensure your safety by leaving. And if you do, take your rescue dog with you.

Dear Abby: I am about to start my new college experience, but I have a few concerns. I'm very picky, and I enjoy my alone time. I like to keep my space clean and tidy, and I'm afraid my roommate(s) will be slob and I'll end up cleaning up after them. I also need alone time so I can focus on myself to recoup after a long day. When I'm here at home I will usually do that in my bedroom. But if I have roommates, that will be difficult to do. I guess I'm asking how to find a happy medium so my roommates and I can be at peace at all times. — Wants To Prepare

Dear Wants: Because you didn't specify how many roommates you will be sharing your space with, I will assume there are more than one — which may place you in the minority. Be open and honest with them about your desire for neatness and tidiness. They may not be as particular as you are, but it will provide you the opportunity to live with different kinds of people. As to the peace and quiet you crave, if adapting to each other's schedules isn't possible, consider heading to the library to find the peace and quiet you need. I wish you luck.

Dear Abby: I am retired, so I have free time on my hands. Recently, while doing a favor for a neighbor couple, I was standing on their porch when a board broke and one of my legs went through up to my thigh. They expressed concern at the time, and I told them I thought I was OK.

The next day, my knee and upper thigh were swollen and bruised. My leg is improving each day, and for that I'm thankful. This happened more than two weeks ago, and I have not gotten a phone call or anything else from these neighbors. Have people really gotten that insensitive, or am I making a big deal out of nothing? — Old School in Georgia

Dear Old School: No, you are not making a big deal out of nothing. And yes, some people have become that insensitive. The reason for your neighbors' silence may be lack of empathy, or it could be fear of a lawsuit. Or they may have thought it was unnecessary to check further because you said you were OK.

DAYS GONE BY FROM THE EAST OREGONIAN

The Round-Up Association has its eye on a new attraction that may be secured for the big show this fall in the person of Frank Tretrowski, an employe of Penland Bros. Transfer Co. The demand for his services grew out of an incident yesterday afternoon in which he figured as the chief thrill maker. In some way Tretrowski lost his balance Thursday afternoon while driving a team of mules to a delivery wagon. He was precipitated to the tongue of the wagon. His team became frightened and started to run west on Court street. He had one arm hooked over the pole and the lines dangled through his other hand. He was yelling to the team to stop, but they maintained their rapid run, and he balanced himself in his perilous position. The team turned south on Aura street and were stopped within the first block. No damage was done, but onlookers expected to see Tretrowski picked up in pieces.

Queensland, Australia. They met the Round-Up court last year when the Pendleton group visited the Cheyenne Frontier Days. "If any of you can ever get to Australia, be sure to visit us," they said. Rachel, a student at Washington State University, wrote to the Baumans and her mother, Barbara Brunner, sent the Round-Up edition of the East Oregonian to them. "They invited me to work for them, doing odd jobs and helping with the cattle," Rachel said. She realizes that it will be winter in Australia, but the Baumans told her they have mild weather.

A second mammoth bone has likely been discovered on land slated to become a golf course on the Umatilla Indian Reservation. "We took measures to protect it," said Jeff Van Pelt, manager of the tribal Cultural Resources Protection Program, adding that the latest discovery has yet to be positively identified. Preserving the site rather than excavating is a sensible approach, according to the archaeologist for the State Historic Preservation Office. As for the latest discovery, an Oregon State University anthropologist is returning to the reservation to study the bone, which tribal officials came across within a week of unearthing a four-pound hairy mammoth tooth.
