

DEAR ABBY

Girlfriend maintains a 'fan club' on Facebook

Dear Abby: I've been dating the same woman for more than two years. She is a beautiful lady who has quite a few male "fans" on Facebook, mostly from before we met. What bothers me, and I don't understand why, is her habit of posting selfies and then loving the comments from other men about her looks. We have discussed this many times, but she can't seem to stop.

Other than this, we seem to have a healthy relationship with the occasional, normal hiccups. I would like to take it to the next level, but I can't help wondering if the Facebook habit is a sign that she needs more than what our relationship is giving her. Please advise. — Hesitant in Ohio

Dear Hesitant: Her Facebook habit may be a sign that your lady friend is insecure — or conceited — about her looks, which is why she encourages these "fans" by "hearting" their comments. Frankly, it's sad that she needs more validation than she can get from one person, but that's the woman you're involved with. If she were seeing these men in the real world, I would say you have a serious problem. But she's not, so it shouldn't present a threat unless you make it one.

Dear Abby: My grandson, who I haven't seen in 10 years, is getting married to a girl I don't know. My husband, "Hank," and I are invited to the wedding. We live 1,000 miles away, so we have to book a flight, reserve a hotel and pay for all our meals.

Hank has been waiting the last three months for a date for knee surgery. Most of the time, he's in pain — especially when he walks. My daughter thinks we should postpone his surgery to attend the wedding. What do you think? — Debating in the South

Dear Debating: Of course your daughter wants her father at her son's wedding. That she would be disappointed — as would the both of you — is understandable. But does she really want him there limping, wincing and in constant pain? Remind her that it has taken three months to get this surgery calendared. Tell her you will be with them in spirit on their special day, but her father's health must come first. Then stick to your guns.

Dear Abby: I work in a small office of 15 people. The person next to me is diabetic and wears a beeper that goes off all day long. Am I supposed to endure this annoying sound even though she can put it on vibrate? — Disturbed in Texas

Dear Disturbed: No, you are not. Ask your co-worker if putting her beeper on vibrate would work for her, because the sound distracts you. If she's willing to do that, your problem is solved. However, if she isn't, then it may be time to discuss this with your supervisor or employer because it may be possible to relocate your workstation to another area.

Eight hits garnered off of Gartiez and Kelly, coupled with errors on the part of Helix players enabled Captain Gunner Peterson's Buckaroos to win yesterday's contest with the Indians, and incidentally, the pennant in the Wheat Belt League. The final score was 12 to 6. Yesterday's victory makes the Bucks' percentage a perfect one with six victories to their credit, and they have won the pennant. Only one more game remains on the schedule, that with Weston set for Sunday at Weston. An effort may be made to arrange with the Weston management to play the game one night this week which will enable the Bucks to play a few games of independent ball.

There are no "Don't feed the bears" signs in the Tollgate area, but it might be a good idea. Cindy Hunkapillar, a McEwen High School freshman, and her girlfriends were enjoying a party arranged as a farewell for Judy Christianson in a cabin near Tollgate Wednesday evening. Cindy tossed into the snow a batch of taffy that hadn't turned out well. A bit later someone looked out the window and saw a full-grown brown bear approaching the candy. Finishing the sweets, he ambled up onto the cabin porch to finish off bacon bits and bread crumbs put out for the bluejays. Then he reared up, put his big paws on the window and peered in as the girls huddled around their chaperone, Mrs. Chet Hunkapillar. Then he went to the door, to another window and finally to a second entrance to the cabin before he left. It was just too, too much. When the bear left, so did the girls.

Officer Tod Keppinger is enjoying the stealth nature of his new assignment as Hermiston's motorcycle cop. Most motorists haven't noticed Keppinger observing traffic on his police motorcycle, but they sure notice him when the lights go on and the siren sounds. "I definitely have the element of surprise," Keppinger said. On his new motorcycle patrol, Keppinger will focus on increasing awareness of traffic laws and catching violators of those laws. Riding the motorcycle eight hours a day is physically demanding, he said, adding he's finding out he has muscles he didn't know he had. "I thought it would be easier," Keppinger said while clad in knee-high black boots and an emerging farmer's tan on his arms.
